Fishing Town In Louisiana Is Isolated By Hurricane

St. Charles Lashed by High Winds; Store Windows Smashed.

50-to-100-Mile Area Affected by Storm

No News Received From Cameron; 12-Foot Waves Reported.

By the Associated Press.

New Orleans, Aug. 14.—The center of a tropical storm swept out of the Gulf of Mexico tonight, causing its greatest damage in the region of Lake Charles, La., where a 60-mile wind and heavy rains tore down communication and power lines.

No news had been heard of the fate of Cameron, fishing village of 100, south of Lake Charles. Seas were reported running 12 feet high before communications were disrupted.

Lake Charles, "above or near" which the Weather Bureau placed the center of the storm at 7:45 p. m., reported winds reaching 60-miles-an-hour swept the city.

Telegraph and telephone wires were whipped to the ground, isolating the city for nearly an hour. Power lines also went down, throwing several sections into darkness.

Swept in From South.

The worst of the storm passed at 10:15 p. m. (E. S. T.). It swept in from the south about 8 p. m.

At Jennings, La., 40 miles east of Lake Charles, there was a 40-mile per hour wind. Trees were uprooted.

At Lake Arthur some small boats were reported upset.

The 9:30 advisory said the storm would "diminish in intensity but precaution against high tides on Louisiana coast west of Morgan City should be continued tonight until danger passes."

50 Miles Affected.

W. F. McDonald, chief meteorologist of the New Orleans Weather Bureau, said the storm struck the Louisiana coast at less than hurricane force and was diminishing in intensity as it moved inland.

The Weather Bureau said only 50 to 100 miles of coast line was affected.

[Earlier, the Weather Bureau had feared the hurricane would strike a wide stretch of East Texas and West Louisiana coast, with winds varying in velocity from 40 to 60 miles an hour and possibly as high as 70 miles an hour, United Press said.

[Residents of exposed points along this section of the coast had battened down houses and rushed inland to escape the expected fury of the storm.

Shipping Warned.

[Shipping had been tied up, as small craft were ordered to stay in port and larger vessels were warned to stay away from the center of the hurricane.

[Heavy rains lashed the Louisiana and East Texas coasts. Two adults and three children, drifting in an outboard motor boat on choppy Lake Pontchartrain at New Orleans, were sighted from the air and a Coast Guard patrol boat rescued them. Air traffic was halted.—Editor's note.]

Returned to Homes.

Port Arthur, Tex., Aug. 14 (U.P.).—Thousands returned to their homes tonight after word was broadcast that a hurricane, expected to strike in this populous industrial and shipping area, had veered and was blowing itself out east of here. High winds lashed the area but did little damage.

Queen Mary and Plane Set Atlantic Records

British Liner Crosses in 3 Days, 20 Hours, 42 Minutes.

Nazi Fliers Beat Schedule of 20 Hours by Five Minutes.

By the United Press.

Cherbourg, France, Aug. 14.—The crack Cunard White Star liner Queen Mary tonight nosed into her Cherbourg berth after the fastest crossing in 446 years of transatlantic navigation and claimed the famed blue ribbon from her French rival, the Normandie.

ROBERT IRVING

Commodore Robert B. Irving, master of the 80,773-ton Queen Mary, charted the liner's time for 2,938 miles between Ambrose Light, off New York, and Bishop's Rock, off Southampton, at 3 days 20 hours and 42 minutes.

Thus, he reported, the Queen Mary cut 1 hour and 25 minutes from the Normandie's record time for an eastbound crossing of 3 days 22 hours and 7 minutes established a year ago this month.

When the Queen Mary arrived in New York August 8 on her last voyage she had smashed the Normandie's westbound record by 1 hour and 14 minutes, completing the run from Bishop's Rock to Ambrose Light in 3 days 21 hours and 48 minutes.

The record run ending tonight climaxed, but probably does not end, two years of intense but sporting rivalry between the Queen Mary

Berlin, Aug. 14.—As matter-of-fact as a railroad train crew, four German fliers brought their big airliner Brandenburg to a landing on rain-soaked Tempelhof Airdrome today, ending in record time a return nonstop flight from New York.

ALFRED HENKE.

To the crew it was mere routine. They arrived "on time" at 9:57 a. m. (3:57 a. m., E. S. T.) after a transatlantic crossing from Floyd Bennett Field, New York, in 19 hours and 55 minutes. Their schedule called for 20 hours.

But the arrival of the 23-passenger Focke-Wulf plane was acclaimed as a triumph by German air officials.

It was the first aerial round-trip between Germany and the United States in nonstop flight. It clipped 5 hours and 50 minutes from the only previous nonstop West-East crossing to Germany, made by the late Wiley Post on the first leg of his 'round-the-world flight in 1933.

[A broad hint that Capt. Alfred Henke and his companions soon might attempt, with backing of the government, to lower the globe-circling record of Howard Hughes—three days, 19 hours, 14 minutes established a month ago—came from

Wheat Export Subsidy Aim Of Wallace

Secretary Seeks to Place 100 Million Bushels on World Markets.

Farmers Would Profit; Foreign Price Lower Than Local.

By the Associated Press.

Secretary Wallace is working on a proposal to place at least 100,000,000 bushels of surplus American wheat in world markets by means of an export subsidy, informed officials said yesterday.

Details of the proposal are being guarded closely, it was said, and have been discussed only with a few agriculture officials and Secretary of State Hull. The policy of subsidizing exports has been criticized in the past by the State Department chief and there was speculation as to whether Hull would carry objections to President Roosevelt.

The competitive situation developing in the world's grain markets, and prospects of a record-breaking surplus of American wheat and declining domestic prices, were said to have influenced Wallace's undertaking.

Hinted at Meeting.

He hinted at a meeting of State farm leaders last week he had such a proposal in mind.

After pointing out that during the past year this country exported about 98,000,000 bushels of wheat, which he described as about the American share of world trade, Wallace said:

"There is grave question as to whether we will be able to put more than 50,000,000 bushels on the world market unless we take some special types of action designed to hold on to our fair share of the world wheat trade."

He added "it might be worth while, perhaps, to have a certain amount of export subsidy on wheat."

Agriculture Department economists said present prospects indicated wheat-producing nations would have almost twice as much grain available for export as buying countries needed. Canada, with a big crop, already has announced it would go out after foreign markets, even if the government had to pay subsidies.

To Use Customs Receipts.

Most other major wheat-producing countries use some form of export subsidy.

Congress has authorized a portion of United States customs receipts may be used for subsidies.

Under a subsidy system, exporters would be permitted to sell wheat in foreign markets at prices low enough to meet competition from other countries. The Government would pay the exporters the difference between these prices and the higher domestic price.

Secretary Hull has opposed export subsidies on the ground that they would lead to retaliatory measures by other countries and thus increase world trade barriers.

2 Aides Defy Roosevelt to Back Smith

By Sidney Olson.
A Staff Correspondent.

Greenville, S. C., Aug. 14—Working for the almost certain re-election of Senator Smith in this State's primary August 30 are two friends of President Roosevelt. The President on the other hand, wants "Cotton Ed" purged from the Senate.

One is the suave, charming Senator Byrnes and the other is Burnet R. Maybank, young, aggressive Mayor of Charleston.

Byrnes is a veteran New Dealer who has only split with the Administration on purely Southern issues, although in general also antagonistic to the more advanced labor measures in the past three sessions. Maybank, while not a 100 percenter, personally is one of the strongest and most effective New Dealers in the State.

Friends of Both Active.

These two men more than any others, and more even than "Cotton Ed" himself, will be responsible for Smith's re-election if the veteran of 30 years in the Senate is able to defeat both Edgar A. Brown, State politician, and Gov. Olin D. Johnston, his opponents.

Byrnes has not participated openly. Maybank, who leads commandingly in the race for the Governor's chair, has maintained a "hands-off" attitude.

But every important aide and friend of Byrnes is actively or quietly working in Smith's behalf and it is known that Maybank will swing Charleston's 22,000 votes almost solidly behind Smith.

The pattern is one of pure politics. As long as Smith is in the Senate, Byrnes has a clear field, commanding all of the patronage and power of Lith. ce Smith, long at outs with the White House, gets nothing from the Administration. If a strong young man went to the Senate from South Carolina, Byrnes perforce would have to share his extensive perquisites.

Maybank is looking to the future with a clear perspective on future glory. Under careful management, designed not to push him ahead too fast—with the Happy Chandler example in Kentucky only too perfect an illustration—Maybank is being groomed for Smith's seat eventually.

Byrnes Paving the Way.

In the meantime the surrounding brains want a unified and powerful State political organization built up. With the rambunctious maverick, Johnston, in the Governor's seat, South Carolina's State organization has been split almost crosswise and the memory of Johnston's costly blunder in calling out the National Guard to oust

N. Y. Expects Sensations as Trial of Hines Opens Today

Dewey in Charge Of Prosecution

Jury Panel Will Crowd Court, So Public Is Barred First Day.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Aug. 14.—James J. Hines, Tammany district leader, will go to trial at 10 a. m. tomorrow before Justice Ferdinand Pecora in supreme court on charges of having run New York City's $100,000,000-yearly policy racket with the late Arthur (Dutch Schultz) Flegenheimer.

While the trial itself is expected to be the most sensational criminal action against a major politician since William Marcy (Boss) Tweed, grand sachem of Tammany Hall, was sentenced to prison in 1873 for defrauding the voters of some $50,000,000 of public funds, Hines is the first important political figure in New York State to be charged with conniving with racketeers and sharing the profits of their enterprises.

He is charged specifically with influencing, intimidating and bribing public officials in an effort to make the Harlem policy racket run smoothly from the time that Schultz took it over by force and violence in 1930. It is said that his weekly rakeoff was from $500 to $1,000.

But One Other on Trial.

The 61-year-old politician, a blacksmith before he became a Tammany leader 26 years ago, will stand trial with only one of the eight defendants indicted with him. His alleged co-conspirator is Martin ("Moe") Weintraub, attorney for Schultz's small-time policy cases.

It is believed possible the Weintraub indictment may be dismissed, leaving Hines as the sole defendant not missing, dead, or avowedly guilty.

Three of the defendants unquestionably will testify for the State. They are: J. Richard ("Dixie") Davis, attorney for Schultz, who is said to have taken over his lucrative rackets after the racketeer was shot and killed in a Newark, N. J., saloon in October, 1935; George Weinberg, head of Schultz's strong-arm department, whose brother "Bo" is believed entombed in cement at the bottom of the East River, a victim of gang vengeance; and Harry ("Big Harry") Schoenhaus, the only man Schultz ever trusted to keep his books.

Political Ramifications.

While these three have pleaded guilty, the remaining four are unapprehended and, for purposes of this trial, unwanted. Despite political ramifications of the trial by reason of Hines' local prominence and his former favor with the Washington Administration, the case remains essentially a racket case.

It will begin tomorrow with selection of 12 jurors and two alternates from a special "blue ribbon" panel of 300 veniremen, who will so crowd Room 148 of the New York County Court House that spectators will be barred from court until the jury is chosen.

From that time until a verdict is reached, which has been estimated at from six to eight weeks, 150 persons will be permitted to view the proceedings at one time. There will be 52 working press representatives and nearly that many feature and magazine writers, radio commentators and artists.

While neither defense nor prosecution would comment today on the forthcoming trial, it was learned District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey spent the week-end at his office polishing up his case. It will be the first case he has prosecuted personally since taking office last January.

Europe Jittery As Reich War Games Start

Czech Frontier Incident Feared; France, Germany Strengthen Borders.

By the Associated Press.

London, Aug. 14.—Germany's powerful army was drawn up in war-like array tonight for maneuvers beginning tomorrow as other European nations watched with apprehension lest some Czechoslovak frontier incident produce a lightning conflict.

Britain and France, disturbed by the Nazis' heavy realism, remained in close contact. Prime Minister Chamberlain stayed close to the foreign office.

Czechoslovakia was in a state of preparedness since her army partly mobilized May 21.

Germany's maneuvers along the Czechoslovak and French borders were expected to last about six weeks.

French and German frontier patrols were strengthened as Nazi workers by the thousands labored feverishly at the task of erecting huge secret fortifications to protect her western border.

The Nazis' unusual ostentation in calling out reservists, mobilizing automobiles, motorcycles, horses and requisitioning other civilian property for the widespread war games puzzled other powers despite German deprecation of their alarm.

The most obvious conclusion was that the tremendous military display was designed to impress Czechoslovakia, in the midst of her

U.S. Bar Names 9 to Fight for Bill of Rights

Grenville Clark Chairman; J. A. Padway, of D. C., Also Appointed.

Frank J. Hogan, president of the American Bar Association, announced yesterday the appointment of nine distinguished lawyers to a special Bill of Rights Committee authorized at the recent Cleveland convention.

Grenville Clark, of New York City, was named chairman of the committee. He is a member of the law firm of Root, Clark, Buckner & Ballantine, which at one time was headed by the late Elihu Root, former Secretary of State, Secretary of War and United States Senator. Clark is described as an independent in politics.

Other members of the committee are:

Douglas Arant, of Birmingham, former president of the Alabama State Bar Association, a leading lawyer of the South, and a Democrat.

Osmer C. Fitts, of Ludlow, Vt., who will represent the Junior Bar section of the association on the committee. He is a Republican.

Zechariah Chafee, jr., of Cambridge, Mass., professor of law at Harvard University, a member of the National Commission on Law Observance and Law Enforcement, popularly called the Wickersham Commission. He is a liberal Democrat.

Judge Ernest A. Green, St. Louis, a former judge of the Missouri Circuit Court and a Democrat, who has been active in civil liberty movements.

Blazing Gas Well Roars Unchecked After Explosion

Jackson, Miss., Aug. 14 (AP).—A blast of uncertain origin early today fired a 50,000,000 cubic foot gas well in the East Jackson field and the resulting flames soon roared completely out of control.

The explosion which touched off the runaway blaze roused nearby sleepers about 1 a. m. Within the first few minutes, the fire melted away valve controls at the outlet of the well casing.

Equipment adequate for subduing the flames was not available here and it was feared the blaze would thunder unchecked until fire-fighting apparatus could be brought from Louisiana.

No casualties were reported. Roar of the blaze was audible for several miles and during the night the light of the flames could be seen for an even greater distance.

24 Seize Franco Trawler, Escape

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Aug. 14.—Girl triplets, the largest weighing one and one-half pounds and the others a pound each, were born at Williamsburg Maternity Hospital, Brooklyn, today to Mrs. Helen Yerks, 25, wife of George Yerks, subway employ.

The infants, born two months prematurely, arrived at 10-minute intervals. They were taken at once to a single incubator. A hospital spokesman said tonight: "We're doing all we can for them and keeping our fingers crossed. They're being kept warm. They are given water and a few drops of whisky at intervals and are being supplied with oxygen when the physician thinks it necessary."

Mrs. Yerks, the spokesman said, was "somewhat shocked" at learning she had had three children instead of one. Yerks, the hospital attache said, "looked at first like I think Dionne must have when his wife gave birth to quintuplets."

Last Survivor Dies In Czech Air Crash

Offenburg, Germany, Aug. 14 (AP). Stewardess Martha Krenter, sole survivor of a Czechoslovak air liner crash yesterday, died in a hospital here today. Sixteen other occupants were killed in the crash. Two Americans, Dorothy Cohen and Moritz Abeles, both of New York, were among victims.

Break Is Near In D.C. Youth's Murder; 1 Held

Police pondered three possible solutions last night to the mystery surrounding the slaying of 20-year-old George E. Sanford Saturday morning as they continued to hold one man at the Fifth Precinct for questioning and pressed a search for two others, already identified.

The man, taken into custody on an open charge yesterday, probably will be questioned in detail today. Detective Capt. Ira E. Keck emphatically denied earlier reports a second man was arrested at the same time.

Capt. Keck declared he expects a break in the case early today. He refused to disclose any details of the investigation, but The Post learned investigators are pursuing the following leads:

That Sanford, who lived at 1213 K street northwest, was shot accidentally; that he was the victim of the wrath of his companions over the outcome of a free-for-all fight which started at a dance at the Young Men's Christian Association; that he was shot in a shakedown attempt which might be linked with hijacking activities of a Southeast gang.

Detective Sergt. Aubrey M. Tolson admitted all of the possibilities are under investigation and that so far none has been discarded.

When the fight began, the young men were ejected from the "Y" and

20 Bullets Pierce Head as Gun Fight Breaks Up Memorial Rites

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 14.—A roaring gun fight in peaceful Central Park, started by a man apparently driven berserk by summonses for minor traffic violations, terrified thousands of Sabbath strollers today, broke up a police memorial service and ended with the madman dead and five persons wounded.

Two of the injured were among the policemen on whom Charles San Filippo, about 40, centered his rifle and shotgun attack.

In the exchange three bystanders were wounded, one critically. An operation was performed on Louis Popernick, 51, shot in the abdomen.

Hundreds of persons, many pushing baby carriages, rushed to the Mall at the first sound of shots, joining 2,000 others clustered around a bandstand where the police ceremonies were being held. Also present were about 250 policemen.

San Filippo, wearing steel bullet-proof plates across his chest and back, was dropped by 20 bullets in the head as he raced across a crowded lawn, firing a repeating rifle. Police found the two summonses in his pockets and his parked car.

They deduced from other papers in his possession that he was obsessed by a police persecution complex. He had written, in vile language, his opinion of policemen and muttered, as he lay dying:

"I was going to try to kill as many cops as I could, and I did."

The wounded officers were Lieut. James McDonnell, called the "most decorated man on the force," and Patrolman Francis Lynch, both 38. They suffered multiple wounds.

Army Developing Television As Long-Range Tactical Eye

Copyright, 1938, by the United Press.

Army technical experts are conducting a quiet but intensive study of the military possibilities of television, which some believe will revolutionize future war tactics, it was learned last night.

Nature of the experiments and the stage of development are closely guarded secrets. However, it was indicated, tests have reached a point where a moving picture version of an enemy's movements hundreds of miles away is a possibility in the very near future.

This would enable general staffs to revise plans and issue new orders instantaneously, thus checkmating surprise moves by the enemy.

Experiments are being conducted to determine if fog, darkness, smoke and water can be pierced by television through the use of infra-red rays.

Military experts revealed it is possible to install a transmitting set in an airplane and send frequent picture flashes to headquarters many miles distant. Stepping up the speed of this process, they said, would permit a full moving picture account to be transmitted from the airplane to a screen at headquarters by radio.

Already flashes can be obtained from altitudes at the limit of visibility. If the experiments with intra-red rays prove successful, it would be possible to record moving pictures of a hostile force from the stratosphere, out of sight of enemy antiaircraft batteries, an official said.

Television may become an indispensible part of the sea coast defense, it was learned. Location of transmitters along the shore or on islands would make possible moving picture studies of the formations adopted by an enemy fleet.

It was said that television also may have an underwater use in discovering the approach of submerged submarines.

Gorges Deep as Grand Canyon Discovered in Ocean's Floor

The discovery of a world-wide series of under water canyons rivaling the Grand Canyon in size is reported today by the American Geographical Society of New York and called one of the most important geological discoveries of this generation.

One of the largest near America, discovered off the California coast, is 70 miles long and varies from 6,000 to 8,000 feet below the ocean floor, the current issue of the Geographical Review reports.

Near the Philippines the Chotsui Pli Canyon reaches a depth of 9,600 feet, or nearly twice the depth of Grand Canyon.

Existence of the canyons has only recently become known through development of an instrument for measuring ocean depths. The apparatus, known as a sonic depth finder, accurately measures the time required for sound to go from the surface to the ocean bottom and be reflected.

With this instrument on a ship the geographer can chart every detail on the ocean floor whether depth is 10 or 10,000 feet, while the vessel steams as fast as 10 knots an hour.

According to some students the canyons give evidence of having been cut by rivers that once flowed across the continental shelf and down its steep slopes. In this case, the continental shelf must have risen 8,000 to 10,000 feet higher than it does now, or the sea level must have been 8,000 to 10,000 feet lower.

Science cannot account for such great changes of land or sea level. Much water was withdrawn from the oceans during the Ice Age, but scientists have found no evidence the sea level was lowered more than 300 feet as a consequence.

A.F.G.E. Lauds O'Connor for Merger Flight

By William V. Nessly.

A political week expected to bring far-reaching "purge" developments in the Democratic party opened yesterday with a defense of Representative O'Connor, one of the reputed "purgees," by the American Federation of Government Employes.

There was made public a letter from Charles I. Stengle, president of the A. F. of L.-affiliated union, thanking O'Connor, chairman of the House Rule Committee, for opposing the Administration's Government reorganization bill. It was this opposition, along with his stand in holding up the wage-hour bill, apparently, that led to New Dealers' determination to defeat O'Connor.

Meanwhile, as President Roosevelt cruised on the Potomac River with Harry Hopkins, his relief administrator, interest in many circles turned to Georgia present hotbed of the purge movement, where Senator George will reply today to President Roosevelt's call for his defeat.

George, in his first formal talk since the President's address at Barnesville, Ga., last Thursday, will speak at Waycross. The Senator informed the President "I accept the challenge," immediately after Mr. Roosevelt finished speaking.

President Talks Tonight.

The President goes on the air from 9:30 to 9:45 o'clock tonight but White House attaches have said he would not mention individuals or States. He will speak to mark the third anniversary of enactment of the social security law, one of the chief points in the social program over which he has differed with conservatives in his own party.

Senator Tydings, of Maryland, another against whom retaliatory action is expected to be taken by the New Dealers, did not vote for the social security measure.

Senator Byrd, of Virginia, still another who has not always gone along with the President, told the Associated Press at Norfolk yesterday that he had not yet framed a statement "suitable for print" on what he thought of the President's support of Lawrence Camp, running against Senator George. The Virginian, saying he was a "good friend" of George, indicated he might "issue a statement later on" after his vacation.

O'Connor Courage Praised.

Stengle's letter was dated April 15 but made public only yesterday. It said:

"Now that the smoke of battle has cleared away I want to express the gratitude of the American Federation of Government Employes to you for the marvelous leadership and splendid service you rendered in behalf of your country and Government employes in general in the position you took on the Reorganization Bill in the House of Representatives.

"It required real courage on your part to stand out for recommittal of this bill and but for your splendid efforts recommital might not have occurred. Like yourself, this organization is not opposed to a fair reorganization of the Government service, but there were so many elements involved in the bill before the House which were contrary to the principles of true democracy that we were unable to subscribe to its enactment into law.

"Doubtless your position on this matter will bring you some criticism from those who favored this legislation, but surely fair minded citizens both in your district and throughout the country when they know the 'internals' of the reorganization bill submitted for passage will approve of your action."

Press Talk Awaited.

There have been reports that the President might take a stand against O'Connor in his press conference tomorrow. On the other hand, he will speak at Hyde Park, in the home State of the Representative, September 17, Constitution Day, and, if he contemplates mentioning O'Connor, might do it at that time.

O'Connor, a brother of the President's former law partner, Basil O'Connor, is opposed for renomination by Deputy Internal Revenue Collector James H. Fay. He narrowly defeated Fay four years ago. In the present campaign O'Connor is receiving considerable Republican support.

Also seeking O'Connor's seat is Byrnes MacDonald, deputy welfare commissioner of New York, who, backed by Mayor LaGuardia, has announced he will enter both the Democratic and Republican primaries, and also has support in the American Labor Party.

G. O. P. Claims 70 Seats.

Another political action yesterday was issuance by Representative Martin, of Massachusetts, chairman of the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee, of a prediction that the Republicans, in November, would gain as many as 70 seats in the House. He forecast G. O. P. gains in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Minnesota and Iowa.

The week also is expected to bring a decision on whether the Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee will take any further denunciatory action against Senate candidates in the recent Kentucky and Tennessee primaries.

Investigators to Report.

Investigators who were returned to those States after making reports that brought statements of shocked surprise from the committee, have returned from their second investigation of campaign tactics and will report to the committee, headed by Senator Sheppard, of Texas, tomorrow.

Working for Washington

Morris Is the Man to 'Sell' It If It Will Better the Capital

EDGAR MORRIS.

He Is a 'Must' for Civic Jobs of All Kinds; Just Now Pushing Red Cross Roll Call and Seeking Conventions.

By Christine Sadler.

Whether it's a bill of goods, a celebration, a civic movement, or an idea—Washington has learned that Edgar Morris is a good man to sell it. His gift for organization and ability to get the right people for the right committees have made him a "must" for the chairmanships of jobs that must be put across.

At present he is concentrating on being chairman of the 1938 Red Cross Roll Call in the District and chairman of the Greater National Capital Committee of the Board of Trade. Plans for the roll call have been completed and although the actual drive does not begin until late September, many are already willing to write it down as a success.

As head of the sales company that bears his name Morris is one of the city's best illustrations of an idea the Greater National Capital Committee now is trying to launch—and that is that Washington is the logical headquarters for offices of associations, and businesses organized on a Nationwide or large regional basis. From this city he serves as Southern representative for many companies with such articles as gas steam radiators, electric water coolers and gas heaters to market. The idea is bearing fruit and the trek of national offices toward Washington is well started.

Planning Blossom Fete.

"It is but a natural trend," Morris explains. "Most national organizations have to keep some contact here, anyway, or spend a great deal sending representatives back and forth."

More conventions for Washington is also part of his Board of Trade committee's immediate program, and already the chairman is thinking about a spring cherry blossom festival that will eclipse all former ones.

Under his chairmanship the committee has been able to keep summer visitor figures up to last year's levels, despite declines in many other parts of the country. Credit for this is given to an "August booklet" which lists all attractions in Washington this hot summer month.

"We went over the list and found that summer offered many things that could not be enjoyed in other parts of the year. An increase in Marine Band concerts, watergate concerts, and the Sylvan Theater performances are some of them," he said.

Heads Carolina Society.

Morris is a past president of the Board of Trade, which was the first organization he joined after coming here in 1912. He organized his own business after returning from a World War camp in 1919. He has been active in the President's Cup Regatta, in inaugural management and the Community Chest. He is a past president of the Kiwanis Club, a Mason, a director of the Southern Gas Association, a trustee of American University, a director of the Boys Club of Washington and a member of the National Press Club.

A native of South Carolina, he has continued to vote in his home State and is president of the South Carolina Society. He played football at Clemson College and today lists football and fishing as his hobbies. He is married and the father of a grown son.

He is a loyal Washingtonian, does not believe the Federal Government is fair in its financial allowance to the District and thinks all outsiders who come here to live should interest themselves in community activities.

Wednesday—James Ring, chairman of the co-ordinating committee of the Neighborhood Councils and administrative assistant of the Alley Dwelling Authority, will be next in the "Working for Washington" series.

Hamilton Calls Hull Deceptive On Trade Data

Contradicts Figures Given on Exports to Cuba in Letter to Pope.

John Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee, last night made public a letter to Secretary Hull challenging accuracy of statements made by Hull in his recent defense of the reciprocal trade program as presented in a communication to Senator Pope shortly before that New Deal Senator's defeat for renomination in Idaho.

Holding that "truth in trade statistics is just as vital as truth in securities," Hamilton cited in detail several instances of what he called "deceptive and in some cases inaccurate statements made in the memoranda distributed by the State Department."

One of these concerned a claim by the State Department that, following the agreement with Cuba, the United States in 1937, exported 446,000 pounds of unmanufactured tobacco to that country.

Scouts "Force for Peace."

Hamilton cited Commerce Department reports to the effect that in 1937, this country did not export any unmanufactured tobacco to Cuba, but in that year imported from Cuba 13,944,000 pounds of unmanufactured tobacco.

Hamilton also challenged the secretary to reconcile his contention that the trade agreements program was a force for peace in the world with the fact that Federal expenditures for national defense had almost doubled since the trade agreements program had been in effect and with the fact that State Department licenses for export of war materials have steadily increased.

The Republican chairman pointed out huge increases of American exports in such war material as pig iron, iron and steel, scrap and steel ingots and asked the Secretary whether it was not "ironical that in order to defend your program you are compelled to rely on figures comprising such huge increases in the export trade of this country in war material?"

Urges Multilateral Pacts.

Hamilton contended that if the State Department believed that the Hawley-Smoot act is the cause of the decreased volume of foreign trade and that the trade agreements program was retifying this condition, "the only fair cmoparison is to give figures for 1929, the last year before the Hawley-Smoot act, and all figures from 1932, the low year of the world depression—and the last year before the Roosevelt Administration came into power—to the latest year available."

He pointed out the State Department compares present trade figures with those of 1934 or some later year instead of with 1929.

Conceding that "excessive trade barriers do promote world unrest," Hamilton contended that "the only way to lower them is through a multilateral agreement," a plan opposed by President Roosevelt at the London Economic Conference in 1933.

"I think," Hamilton said, "since President Roosevelt is responsible for the failure of this conference, you should also tell the American people why the agreements program is better than a multilateral accord."

Georgia Battle May Be Aimed At Rule in 1940

By the Associated Press.

Atlanta, Aug. 14.—A decision by Georgia's New Deal Governor May 28 to seek renomination rather than oppose the veteran Senator George was a factor today in discussions of the Barnesville utterances of President Roosevelt.

Lawrence S. Camp, New Deal district attorney, is indorsed by Mr. Roosevelt as "a gentleman who I hope will be the next Senator from this State."

1940 Control at Stake.

The question was: Is New Deal strategy aimed primarily at the defeat of Senator George or control of Georgia's delegation to the Democratic national convention of 1940?

Postmaster General James A. Farley said Friday Mr. Roosevelt was not to be counted out of the picture in the presidential scene two years hence.

Prestige and one Senate vote are at stake in the four-man Senate race to be decided in a Democratic primary September 14.

Rivers to Rule Delegation.

Gov. Rivers was long regarded last spring as a probable New Deal candidate to oppose George, who had voted against the first wage-hour bill, court revision and Government reorganization.

He conferred with Administration leaders in Washington, declared in mid-May "it's a toss-up" and later qualified for another two-year term as the State's chief executive.

Camp was the last qualifier for the Senate race, planking down his $350 entry fee only a few minutes before the books closed June 1. Marvin McIntyre, White House secretary, had visited Atlanta a few days earlier to receive an honorary degree.

Camp Claims 70 Per Cent.

Opposed by three men with varying ideas of Georgia's "little New Deal," Rivers has advantages in a two-term tradition and a claim upon State capital forces for election support.

Camp, chairman of the State Democratic executive committee, was an original Roosevelt booster of 1932. He has estimated that "70 per cent of the people of Georgia are with the President."

"I believe they will show their appreciation of his leadership by sending the man he approves to the United States Senate," he declared.

By the Associated Press.

Judge Henry Ellenbogen, chairman of the committee on social legislation of the National Lawyers Guild, suggested yesterday that all State taxes for unemployment compensation under the social security act be abolished and the 3 per cent Federal tax retained.

He suggested to his committee that it propose this and other changes in the social security act to Congress at its next session.

Under the present system, he said, the Federal Government levies on employers but credits as a payment on the Federal tax, up to 90 per cent of its amount, the tax paid by an employer to his State fund. Ellenbogen argued this system caused "unnecessary administrative expense."

Would Increase Benefits.

Another charge favored would be lengthening to 26 weeks the period during which unemployment compensation would be paid.

"The present system," said Ellenbogen, "is unnecessarily burdensome and expensive. It creates 52 separate tax collecting bureaus, each with a large number of auditors, accountants, collectors, inspectors and other employes, each of them collecting an unemployment compensation tax from an employer who is already paying such a tax to the Federal Government for the same purpose.

Compels Separate Returns.

It compels the employer to file separate tax returns for the Federal Government and for the State government, each for the same purpose. It imposes upon business large clerical outlays which in no way benefit the unemployed.

He said the change "would not impose any new taxes, but would permit the saving of millions of dollars now expended by the States in the collection of these taxes, and would save for employers millions of dollars by eliminating clerical help they now need to compile the State tax forms."

1922 Navy Cuts Were 'Useless,' Leahy Tells Wisconsin Legion

Doherty Asserts Unpreparedness in War Cost American Lives, Warns Against Those Who Use Organization for Personal Gain.

By the Associated Press.

Ashland, Wis., Aug. 14.—Naval reductions by the United States after 1922 cost $277,695,000 and had "no useful result," Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of United States naval operations, asserted before the Wisconsin department of the American Legion here today.

Leahy, an Ashland native, termed the reductions "the greatest gesture ever made by a nation to the cause of peace." He declared the United States is forced to meet foreign armament increases "ship for ship and gun for gun in order to provide against the possibilities of attack by aliens professing what seems to us strange philosophies of government . . .

"To expect that modern diplomacy will safeguard the property of a nation is to expect too much. To believe in the efficacy of pacts and treaties to protect us against international brigandage is a dream of visionaries."

Daniel J. Doherty, national Legion commander, asserted that many American lives were lost in the World War because of inadequate national defense.

Doherty attacked Legion members who "joined with the idea of making the Legion the mouthpiece for advancement of personal gain.

"The Legion," he said, "is better off without this type of individual."

Customs Delay Halts Earle's Flight in Texas

Brownsville, Tex., Aug. 14 (U.P.).—Gov. Earle, of Pennsylvania, was grounded here tonight on his flight to Mexico and Central America. He was unable to clear customs before Monday morning. He had originally planned to continue to Mexico City today.

Pennsylvania's flying executive was accompanied by his wife and Capt. A. M. Banks, of the Pennsylvania State police.

Mexican Rescuers Fight Toward Plane Crash Site

Mexico City, Aug. 14 (A.P.).—Rescue parties fought laboriously through desolate mountain country of Vera Cruz State today toward the spot where an air liner crashed and burned Friday with 11 persons aboard. Compania Mexicana de Aviacion, operator of the line, said there wa svirtually no hope that the eight passengers and three crew men would be found alive.

Donahey Requests Army to Gather TVA Inquiry Data

By the Associated Press.

Senator Donahey, Democrat, of Ohio, chairman of the congressional committee which is investigating the Tennessee Valley Authority, said last night he had asked President Roosevelt to assign "half a dozen" Army engineers to work on the "yardstick" angle of the committee's investigation.

Donahey said the President had replied that he would "do everything he could" to aid the committee.

He said the committee had been compelled to ask for the Army engineers because Congress had not given it sufficient funds to hire experts to study the cost of TVA power in its relation to the cost of power produced by private concerns.

Congress voted $50,000 for the committee's work. Donahey said he felt that $50,000 isn't going to go very far."

He said the committee already had the services of "17 or 18" workers from various Government agencies.

'Too Damn Much Politics' Is South's Cross, Say Heads

Atlanta, Aug. 14 (A.P.).—Freight rate differentials, the Nation's reciprocal tariff policy, and "too damn much politics" were subjects of comment yesterday by Southern leaders referring to the report of the National Emergency Council as to what ails the South.

Many saw in the council's report a challenge to the South and its ability to solve its economic and social problems.

"I don't think there's a thing wrong with the South except too damn much politics," was the diagnosis of President Edward C. Romfh of the First National Bank at Miami.

Adverse freight rates were given by Edgar Watkins, of Atlanta, attorney for the Southeastern Governors Conference and former examiner for the Interstate Commerce Commission, as one of the South's "greatest handicaps," along with "our low farm income."

Lehman Opposes N. Y. Constitution Bureaucracy Curb

Albany, N. Y., Aug. 14 (A.P.).—Gov. Lehman, a "willing" Democratic candidate for the United States Senate, opposed tonight a constitutional convention proposal which proponents term a curb on governmental bureaucracy and opponents call a "whack at the New Deal."

Would give courts the right to review on the facts as well as the law in appeals from decisions of State boards and bureaus, except those dealing with taxation, education and workmen's compensation.

Public utilities regulation, parole, liquor control, civil service, banking and insurance supervision, relief, old age assistance, unemployment insurance, licensing of those engaged in professions "are only a few" of the State activities which would come under the proposal's provisions, the Governor explained.

"While I have the highest respect for our courts," he said, "I do not believe that any judge, regardless of his ability, can possibly acquire the knowledge and experience in all these different subjects which are now possessed by the administrative bodies."

Parley Adjourns On Controversy At Maytag Plant

Newton, Iowa, Aug. 14 (A.P.).—Final settlement of the Maytag labor controversy tonight appeared to be at least six days away as representatives of the washing machine company and the C. I. O. workers union adjourned a contract parley without reaching an agreement. Participants said the conference was recessed until next Saturday.

Maj. Willard Gaines, National Guard officer, said no plans have been made to move troops from the scene of the three-month dispute between the company and the union. The factory opened under martial law August 4 after an almost continuous shutdown of 13 weeks. Gov. Kraschel last week sought to lift military rule under an arrangement by which local authorities would dismiss all contempt of court citations and other actions filed against workers in connection with the strike.

Postoffice to Ask Bids On Trial Mail Routes

Representative Randolph (Democrat), West Virginia, said last night the Postoffice Department had notified him it would advertise today for bids on experimental air mail routes in Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio, provided for by the last Congress. Bids will be opened September 15.

The experiment contemplates picking up and delivering mail without the plane stopping. The West Virginian, who introduced the bill for the experiment, said his purpose was to provide air mail service for smaller communities.

Ousted UAW Chiefs Weigh Session for Attack on Martin

Detroit, Aug. 14 (A.P.).—Four expelled officers of the United Automobile Workers of America met informally here today to discuss means of raising support for a conference at Toledo, Ohio, next Saturday at which they will prepare to ask for the removal of Homer Martin as president of the automobile union.

Groundwork for a special convention, the only means by which Martin can be removed, was laid at a meeting yesterday at Toledo.

The former officers are Wyndham Mortimer, Richard T. Frankensteen and Ed Hall, vice presidents, and George F. Addes, secretary-treasurer.

7 Arabs Slain in Fight With British Troops

Jerusalem, Aug. 14 (A.P.).—British troops attacked a large Arab band today near Ummekfahum, scene of major battles during the Holy Land strife of 1936. Seven Arabs were killed and of six known wounded three were captured.

Reds Rampant In Hollywood, Agent Charges

Movie Stars Give Money to Communists, Report Asserts to Dies.

By the Associated Press.

Some Hollywood celebrities are using their large salaries to finance communistic activities, a Congressional investigator reported yesterday to the special House committee studying "un-American activities."

Edward Sullivan, the investigator, said evidence tended to show that "all phases of radical and communistic activities are rampant among the studios of Hollywood."

"I might say in passing," he added, "that a very large number of motion-picture stars are strongly opposed to all this subversive activity, but, as one very prominent star told me, if he spoke out loud about the situation he soon would be ditched by the studios and a campaign of vilification would be started against him to ruin him with his public."

U. S. Officials Involved.

Sullivan charged that Harry Bridges, C. I. O. labor leader on the Pacific Coast, "received aid and advice from officials of the Labor Department while patriotic citizens were trying to have him deported for his communistic activities."

The investigator said he could produce witnesses "who can name the day and date when an official of the Immigration Service contacted Harry Bridges and called him to his office, where he read him a confidential letter of instructions on his future behavior, written by an outstanding official of the Labor Department."

Cost Reported in Millions.

Sullivan said a "fearless investigating committee" could learn the names of Government officials who had aided Bridges in his effort to avoid deportation.

Sullivan named none of the persons he accused in the film colony, but declared the public should be informed of their identities.

A statement presenting the report, made public by Chairman Dies (Democrat), of Texas, of the House committee, said:

"According to the report, the time required to conduct a complete and proper investigation and the funds required for such a task is beyond the resources of the committee."

Sullivan reported that a preliminary investigation he conducted on the West Coast showed "unbridled and unchecked" Communistic activity had cost employers and employes alike millions of dollars.

"The Communist Party poses outwardly as the very essence of American democracy," he said, "and loudly proclaims its support of President Roosevelt, which of course was not requested nor asked."

Finds Situation "Startling."

He reported he had found "a very serious and startling situation" in his investigation of subversive activities in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland and Seattle.

"Terrorism, ranging from crop sabotage, kidnaping to murder, are but a few results of examining the evidence offered by the agricultural, industrial and shipping interests on the Pacific Coast," he reported.

Different Communist groups are working within rival labor unions, Sullivan said, adding: "Harry Lundeberg, leader of the group of seamen, who is actively opposing Harry Bridges, is linked up with the Trotskite group."

He reported the American Federation of Labor in San Francisco was actively fighting Communist penetration and that the success of its efforts was in question.

Georgetown U. Planning Rites For 150th Birthday Next May

Father Walsh Heads Central Committee as Pageant and Convocation Are Announced as Features of 1939 Celebration.

Georgetown University will observe the 150th anniversary of its founding with a week's celebration beginning May 7, 1939. Preliminary plans were completed yesterday, the Rev. Arthur A. O'Leary, S. J., university president, has announced.

Famous scholars will join with the Georgetown faculty, student body, and alumni in evaluating the place and function of the university in a modern society.

Features will include a pageant marking Georgetown U.'s development since its establishment in 1789—the year the Constitution of the United States was adopted—and its contribution to American life. A sesquicentennial convocation is scheduled for Saturday, May 13.

The central committee includes the Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J., university vice president, chairman; dean of graduate school, the Rev. Wilfrid Parsons, S. J.; dean of medical school, the Rev. David V. McCauley, S. J.; regent of law school, the Rev. Francis E. Lucey, S. J.; dean of law school, George E. Hamilton; dean of college, the Rev. John E. Grattan, S. J.; dean of dental school, Dr. J. L. B. Murray; dean of foreign service school, Dr. Thomas H. Healy, and Frank J. Hogan, president of American Bar Association and head of the Georgetown Alumni Association.

Georgetown's centennial celebration in 1889 attracted the largest Catholic assemblage in Washington up to that time. President Grover Cleveland was principal speaker.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Roosevelt Field, Long Island, Aug. 14.—Douglas Corrigan tried to do some work on his $900 "crate" here today but had to give up because of the press of sightseers.

Hundreds of visitors crowded around the plane's hangar. So all could see it, the ship was put in a fenced-in inclosure, guarded by four policemen. Before leaving for New York Corrigan said he expected to start his tour of 35 cities Tuesday.

Little Business Group Names Olmsted Head

George Olmsted, of Des Moines, Iowa, former president of the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce, has been elected chairman of the national governing committee of the American Federation of Little Business, it was announced yesterday at the federation's headquarters, 1627 K street northwest.

Olmstead succeeds William P. Ames, of Arlington, Va., who was chosen temporary chairman last February at the time of the establishment of the organization.

Tyre Taylor, of Washington, founder and first president of the Young Democratic Clubs of America, was named general council for the federation. George M. Ferris, also of Washington, will serve as secretary. Other officers are Matt R. Bernhardt, of Lenoir, N. C., vice chairman, and John P. Stafford, of Easton, Md., treasurer.

"The American Federation of Little Business exists as an independent, nonprofit, nonpartisan organization," Chairman Olmsted said after his election. "It has no political axes to grind. It will concentrate upon an affirmative program designed to strengthen the position of small, independent enterprise in the American economic scheme, recognizing that only as an organization is effective locally can it be powerful nationally."

C. I. O. Charges Telegraph Companies Plan Pay Slashes Under Cover of Wage-Hour Law

By the United Press.

The Committee for Industrial Organization charged last night that Western Union and Postal Telegraph companies plan to use the new wage-hour law as an excuse for a general wage reduction of 8.3 per cent affecting 75,000 workers.

The committee's director, John Brophy sent a circular letter to all C. I. O. affiliates asking them to support the American Communications Association in its fight against the reported move.

"The C. I. O. has bent every effort toward the passage of a wage-hour law for the protection of labor," Brophy asserted. "It has no intention of allowing the employers to utilize the law against the interests of labor."

Green Supports Act.

At the same time, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, called on all members of his organization to help enforce and take part in the development of the wage-hour statute. If workers do not, he warned, "the act can be easily turned into oppressive regulation by government fiat."

"If the workers, through Nationwide union representation, will voice their needs and desires, this act will become a powerful idol of true industrial democracy, with which labor will forge a higher standard of work and a better standard of living," he said.

Green sent a 23-page booklet explaining the law to 792 central labor unions, and asked them to appoint local wage-hour committees whose duties would be to disseminate information about the act, to advise affiliate unions and groups of unorganized workers regarding enforcement procedure, and to make known to the unorganized workers how standards above the minimum can be attained by them through organization into unions.

Green said "it is vitally important to labor that minimum wages to be determined by industry committees and embodied in the wage orders of the administrator are set as high as all available facts can justify." He pointed out that the standards established by the law are not general but minimum and that "the determination and maintenance of wages above the minimum is left to collective bargaining between unions and employers."

"Better labor standards can be attained in the future only through organization of workers into unions," he said. "Wage earners of America must remember that the fair labor standards act is their act."

Laundryman Convicted In Housekeeper Killing

Hillsboro, N. Mex., Aug. 14 (AP).—W. B. Cassady, middle-aged laundry man, today was convicted of involuntary manslaughter in the mutilation-slaying of Rose Garcia, his pretty 19-year-old housekeeper, last November 21. Cassady, married and the father of five children was sentenced to from nine to ten years in the State penitentiary.

Brophy charged that the telegraph companies intend to reduce pay to make up for cutting the hours of their employes down to 44 per week—the maximum permitted for interstate industries during the first year of the fair labor standards act.

He asserted that if the reported plan succeeds "this may well be the opening wedge for other industries to take similar action." He said the law provided that no employer shall be justified "in reducing a wage paid by him which is in excess of the applicable minimum wages under this act," but that it was not accompanied by any enforcement provision. This, he said, leaves the companies "a technical loophole for the planned cut."

The C. I. O. and A. F. of L. letters came as Elmer F. Andrews, former New York State industrial commissioner, prepared to take the oath of office and plunge into the difficult task of administering the new wage-hour statute, a keystone New Deal measure.

Andrews is expected to take the oath tomorrow. He faces many perplexing problems, including the task of determining which industries are engaged in interstate commerce, the appointment of industrial committees to recommend higher standards than those in the law, and the selection of personnel from civil service lists to aid in administration.

The law becomes effective October 24. It provides for a 25 cents cents the second and an increase to 40 cents within seven years. Maximum hours per week are 44 the first year, 42 the second, and 40 the third.

Watch, $81, Shoes Go as Man Naps On Bench in Park

Lynn T. Cox, of Hyattsville, Md., aroused himself early yesterday after a park bench nap at Seventh and K streets.

Curious as to the hour, he reached into his pocket and found his gold watch was missing. Reaching further, he missed $81 in cash which he was sure he had before falling asleep.

Cox rose from the bench to investigate the robbery and discovered he was standing in his stocking feet. His shoes were gone as well.

U. S. Quarrels With Japan on Shanghai Area

Fear Clashes in Foreign Sector May Lead to Nippon Occupation.

By the United Press.

Shanghai, (Monday) Aug. 15.—British and American authorities of Shanghai's International Settlement were involved in a quarrel with the special service section of the Japanese Army today which it was feared might lead to Japanese occupation of the Anglo-American areas of the Settlement.

The clash grew out of efforts of the Japanese to force Nationalist Chinese agitators in the foreign areas to cease demonstrations in support of Gen. Chiang and to obtain consent of the British-dominated Settlement municipal council for Japanese seizure of Chinese "terrorists" in the Anglo-American defense zones.

Half a dozen armed clashes during the past 24 hours, in which United States Marines took a leading part, brought minor bloodshed, scores of arrests, and resulted in increasingly bitter recriminations.

British authorities late last night virtually were forced to release a Japanese army colonel, when representatives of the Japanese high command called upon them.

See Drive Postponed.

Other developments:

Chinese said in Hankow strong counter-attacks on Japanese armies driving on the Chinese provisional capital had resulted in a decision of the Japanese high command to postpone their "grand drive" on the Wuhan (Wunchang, Hankow and Hanyang) area "possibly until dry weather in October."

Chinese terrorists and guerrillas were increasingly active throughout the Yangtze Valley and in the "Japanese occupied areas" of North China. More than 400 Japanese were reported killed when Communist geurrillas wrecked a Peiping-Hankow railway train south of Peiping, and attacks were carried garrison of 30 men at Hungjao was out in Shanghai, where a Japanese wiped out last night.

Gunfire Heard by Foreigners.

Other guerrilla bands attacked Japanese outposts in Pootung, across the Whangpoo River from the International Settlement, and gunfire was heard by foreigners.

The Hankow War Office announced guerrillas had recaptured the town of Fuyang, 20 miles northwest of Hangchow. In Shansi Province, Chinese mobile armies under direction of Communist Gen. Chu Teh, had killed 1,230 Japanese soldiers, wounded 4,600 and captured 580 in recent fighting.

Japanese denied this and said their forces had captured Pinglu, in South Shansi, and then taken Mayochin after which they routed the Chinese at Wuwangtu. In North Shansi, the Japanese said, they killed 1,000 of 4,000 Chinese cavalrymen.

Both sides reported that Japanese planes yesterday again bombed the big Chinese airdrome at Nanchang, southeast of Hankow, causing heavy damage and killing civilians.

Japanese planes again have bombed Canton, Hankow and the South China railways, succeeding in stopping traffic for four consecutive days on the vital Hongkong-Canton-Hankow railway.

Incidents Feared In Nazi Maneuvers negotiations with the Sudeten Germans.

A Reuters, British news agency, dispatch from Prague said the Czechoslovak government, counselling restraint, ordered the trial of army officers responsible for last week's bristling declaration:

"There can be no retreat. For this principle (the state's authority) we can die, but we can never withdraw—not one step, not one inch."

Reuters said Prague ordered the trial on the grounds the officers broke the law prohibiting political activity by army men.

Many observers believed the officers' statement was an indication that restraint engendered by Viscount Runciman's presence as an unofficial British mediator was beginning to crumble and that Czechoslovak nationalism was beginning to reassert itself.

Shaping British Policy.

Britain's attention centered anxiously on Lord Runciman's efforts to settle the bitter issue between the Czechoslovak government and its Sudeten German minority.

The growing conviction here was that, beyond the task of trying to solve the minority quarrel, the Runciman mission was to point the way for future British policy toward that European danger spot.

If the mission fails to find a compromise, it may determine largely how far Great Britain would go in supporting France if the final issue of the Nazi-supported Sudeten German struggle comes to war.

Prime Minister Chamberlain has said "he is an investigator and mediator, and denied Lord Runciman was "in any sense an arbitrator."

Still, if he reports the Prague government refuses to offer sufficient concessions to the Sudeten Germans, Britain probably will increase her pressure on the Czechoslovaks for peace. She also might warn France against counting too heavily on British support.

But, if Lord Runciman works out a compromise the Germanic minority rejects, it may lead Britain to adopt a firmer attitude toward Germany on the question.

Sally Clark Sings a Love Song

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Nazis Acclaim Atlantic Fliers In Record Hop

Flight

a high Nazi official a few minutes after the fliers emerged smiling from the Brandenburg to the wild acclaim of their countrymen, the United Press reported.

[Air Gen. Erhard Milch, who met the returning fliers on behalf of Field Marshal Goering, revealed in a speech of welcome that the fliers originally had intended to fly around the world.

[But "out of comradeship," he explained, the plan was abandoned and it was decided to make a round-trip flight to New York instead of flying over Hughes' same route around the world.—Editor's Note.]

Rain put a crimp in a planned celebration. Planes had circled over Berlin, dropping handbills to herald the transatlantic fliers' approach, but the announcements were soggy and attracted little attention.

The airmen were greeted first at a reception platform on the air field and then taken by automobile past official buildings flying Nazi colors for further ceremonies at the Aviators Club.

"We were simply astounded at the hearty reception in New York," said Capt. Henke, veteran transatlantic flier, who commanded the flight.

Although they privately expressed their need for "some good, long sleep," they attended both festivities. Most of the way across they had alternated as pilots of the four-motored landplane one-hour tricks.

Wolfgang von Gronau, president of the German Aeroclub, who flew the Dornier "Wal" to New York several times, presented each member of the crew a silver plate and paid them tribute as an "ambitious few of Germany's thousands of pilots who would have performed the same feat if given a chance."

Outside, yelling crowds demanded to see them and broke into enthusiastic "heils," waving paper swastikas each time they appeared on the balcony.

The Brandenburg is similar to an American Douglas DC-3 except that it is powered by four motors instead of two. They are 850-horsepower Pratt and Whitney Hornets, built by the Bavarian Motor Works under license by the American company. Besides receiving apparatus, the plane is equipped with two short wave and two long wave radio transmitters.

Chancellor Hitler telegraphed the fliers from his Berchtesgaden retreat: "I'm much gratified at your brilliant success. Best wishes." Propaganda Minister Goebbels messaged his pride and admiration over the Brandenburg's achievement.

There was a chuckle when Templehof customs officers solemnly carried out their duties, questioning the fliers as to whether they had "anything to declare."

The fliers laughingly displayed their uneaten food supplies with the remark that "our American friends gave us enough provender for five such journeys."

They paid high tribute to the Reich's weather service, which, they said, was so accurate as to make other checks virtually unnecessary.

Gen. Milch expressed gratitude for the reception and honors paid the quartet by American authorities and citizens of New York.

He said he had reason to believe Goering would place a new machine at their disposal for further flights "whenever they wished and to wherever they wanted to go."

The fliers said they had no trouble whatever with the Brandenburg's motors.

Queen Mary's Voyage Lowers Ocean Record

Cunard

and the Normandie, superships of approximately the same tonnage, passenger capacity and length.

The Queen Mary's average speed for the eastbound crossing was 31.69 knots. Her speed for the trip to New York earlier this month averaged more than 30 knots.

Cunard officials emphasized that in setting the new record the Queen Mary sailed two miles farther than the Normandie on her record voyage from New York to Cherbourg a year ago and that, in addition, the British passenger vessel established new daily records for speed and distance for the last three days.

Passengers aboard the Queen Mary began rejoicing when it was announced shortly after the vessel passed Bishop's Rock that they would be able to be in Paris tonight. On the eastward voyage the Queen Mary passed Ambrose Light at noon (E. S. T.), Thursday.

Yesterday the Queen Mary set a high mark for a daily run, making 737 miles in a 24-hour period at an average of 32.04 knots.

Passengers aboard the liner, who ordinarily would not reach Cherbourg until Monday morning after a Wednesday sailing from New York, could have crossed the Atlantic 17 times while Columbus was sailing from Spain to the West Indies on his first voyage of exploration in 1492, a voyage that started 446 years ago this month and took an estimated 70 days.

The first transatlantic liner using steam, the Savannah, in 1819 crossed the ocean from Savannah to Liverpool in 26 days.

Father Johnson's Mother Dies at 70

Mrs. Katherine Johnson, 70, mother of the Rev. George Johnson, Catholic University professor and education department director of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, died yesterday at her home, 1222 Quincy street northeast.

Mrs. Johnson, a resident of Washington for the last 17 years, also leaves a daughter, Mrs. Frank Drobka, and a grandson. Funeral will be held from the residence tomorrow at 9:30 a. m., with mass at the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, on the university grounds. Interment will be in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

Rebels Batter New Province In South Spain

Loyalists Claim 18 Franco Planes Downed Without Single Loss.

By the Associated Press.

Hendaye, France, Aug. 14.—Insurgent southern armies today reached the gates of Ciudad Real province, a government stronghold since the start of the civil war and Spain's rich mercury mining region.

Forces under Gen. Queipo de Llano pushed through Badajoz Province to the limits of Ciudad Real about 15 miles from Almaden. Another force drove through Valdecaballeros to the Guadiana River.

Loyalist Admit Retreat.

On the northeastern Ebro River front insurgent offensive attempted to wipe out the foothold won by government troops but government dispatches said they were being checked with heavy losses.

In one of the sharpest air engagements of the war, government leaders said today, their fighters brought down 18 insurgent craft at Gandesa without the loss of a single plane.

Meanwhile insurgent conducted the fourth raid on Barcelona within 24 hours. Little damage was done and there were no casualties.

Valencia Reported "Saved."

[Miaja announced tonight the besieged Valencia has been saved by his "diversion" tactics on other fronts, United Press reported.

[The enemy leader, Gen. Franco, was forced to withdraw 60,000 of his crack troops from the "win-the-war" drive on Valencia.—Editor's note.]

To Seek Supplies in U. S.

Barcelona, Aug. 14 (AP).—Ernst Toller, exiled German poet and dramatist, outlined plans today for a campaign in America and Europe to obtain food for civilian Spain.

Toller said governments as well as social organizations would be asked to donate and distribute supplies in the manner World War relief was administered by former President Herbert Hoover in Belgium.

Bromo-Seltzer's President Dies

Toronto, Aug. 14 (Canadian Press).—J. Edward Murray, 47, president of the Bromo-Seltzer Co. of Canada and the United States, died today of pneumonia at his summer home at Big Bay Point, 55 miles north of Toronto.

Murray was a nephew of the founder of the company, Capt. I. Emerson. His home was in Baltimore. He is survived by his wife, the former Nora Cumming, of Toronto, and three children.

Japanese Advance on Border Perils Truce, Soviet Declares

By J. D. White,
Associated Press Staff Correspondent.

Hsinking, Manchukuo, Aug. 14.—Japanese army authorities in this capital of Japan-controlled Manchukuo freely predict the possibility of new frontier incidents with Soviet Russia despite the current truce halting warfare at Changkufeng.

[A Soviet communique released in Moscow today said a new armed clash at Changkufeng was narrowly averted when Japanese troops moved forward after the armistice of August 11 went into effect.

[The Russian announcement asserted Japanese troops occupied the northern slope of Changkufeng Hill and got within a few yards of Soviet troops.

[Tass, official Soviet News Agency, said Soviet Commissar of Foreign Affairs Litvinoff, demanded the withdrawal of Japanese troops for at least 100 meters (328 feet.)

[If withdrawal was not effected, the agency said, Litvinoff had warned, Russia would consider the armistice violated.]

Units of Manchukuo's military forces are heading toward the border region, but military authorities said they intended to engage only in summer maneuvers.

Manchukuoans say they are not relaxing precautions a single moment for fear "the other side may break the truce." Air raid precautions still are in effect in Hsinking.

Vigilant along Manchukuo's 3,000-mile frontier, the Japanese forces are using railway, highway and airdrome defenses constructed in the past seven years to modernize defenses of the puppet empire. From Hsinking strategic railroads branch toward all the frontiers.

Army authorities say the sorest trouble points are the poorly-defined stretches of the 3,000-mile Siberian frontier.

Sensations Due At Hines Trial, Opening Today

Hines

The indictment of Hines culminated three years of painstaking investigation by Dewey, who made his primary move in January, 1937, when his agents seized about 70 white and colored men and women in a series of raids in Harlem.

Underlings Name Davis.

Although none of the top racketeers was apprehended, questioning of the underlings produced enough information to warrant the handing up of an indictment in July. It named Davis as titular head of the racket, following the death of his boss, Schultz; Weintraub, George and Bo Weinberg; Alexander Pompez, Mathias Joseph ("Big Joe") Ison, Joseph ("Little Joe") Ison, Dan Smith, a former detective, and several satellites of the Schultz mob.

After lengthy court maneuvers the two Isons, Weintraub and Pompez were rounded up. They pleaded guilty and what they told Dewey pushed his investigation into the brackets of minor and major public officials.

Meanwhile, Davis had fled the city. But last February 2 Charles P. Grimes, assistant district attorney, captured him in Philadelphia with George Weinberg and Rose Ricker, an actress known as Hope Dare. They were returned to New York.

Frightened Man Talks.

While Davis remained in the Tombs in default of $200,000 bail, detectives picked up Schoenhaus on May 12. It was an important break in the case. "Big Harry" was frightened and willing to talk about Schultz's financial transactions.

Whatever information came from Schoenhaus and Weinberg, Dewey evidently felt confident enough on May 25 to arrest Hines, most powerful of Tammany Hall's district leaders. Hines pleaded not guilty and was released in $20,000 bail.

Hines was indicted by the extraordinary grand jury the following day together with Davis and the seven other defendants. A day later Weinberg and Schoenhaus tipped the district attorney's hand by pleading guilty to the indictment. It was understood both would turn State's evidence.

Job Was to "Fix" Judges.

Hines's indictment charged him with conspiring with Schultz and his mob to control the Harlem numbers racket. It said his part in the racket was to fix judges and other public officials. One conspiracy count of contriving the racket and 12 felony counts of conducting it are charged against him and the other defendants. Together, they call for 25 years in State's prison for maximum sentence upon conviction.

Dewey has charged that the conspiracy came from the mind of Davis, and was consummated with typical gang killings and brutality until the independent Harlem policy bankers were fully in line with the Schultz organization. Davis, recently disbarred, took care of freeing minor policy offenders from the courts, while Hines allegedly attended to the more important figures.

The indictment of Hines precipitated a furious legal battle. Hines' attorneys vainly petitioned Justice Pecora for a trial at least 100 miles away from the metropolitan area and separated from that of Davis and their seven co-defendants.

Hines Wins Maneuver.

Hines did, however, win the right to a bill of particulars naming the judges he allegedly bribed and setting forth in more detail the crimes he is accused of. After considerable technical maneuvering, Dewey named William Copeland Dodge, whom he succeeded as district attorney; Magistrate Hulon Capshaw, and the late Magistrate Francis J. Erwin. The first two denied the charges.

Hines was denied further applications to view the minutes of the grand jury that indicted him and a plea to be tried by an ordinary, not a special, jury. The 300 blue ribbon talesmen were drawn August 1.

Meanwhile, Davis, whose bail had been reduced to $75,000, was being taken daily to visit his physician in an effort to stal off a potential operation for removing his tonsils. In the last week of July it was learned that he was being permitted, on those excursions, to visit his friend, Hope Dare, at her apartment.

132 Witnesses isted.

Disclosure of the visits led to newspaper speculation as to possibility of his pleading guilty and testifying against Hines.

On July 30 he did just that and was paroled in custody of the district attorney.

A final move by the defense for an order upon Dewey to show cause why the indictment against Hines should not be dismissed for failure to name sufficient judges allegedly bribed and to sufficiently delineate Hines' crimes was dismissed.

It is understood, Dewey has shortened his case by removing evidence against Davis and concentrating all his efforts on showing the alleged participation of Hines in the policy racket. With the assistance of 132 witnesses, it is believed that the facts of that case will take three weeks to present. The remaining time will be taken up with selection of the jury, cross-examination and rebuttal.

What a List of Songs to Learn!

Capital Night Clubs

By Mary Harris

There'll be much table-to-table cruising in the Anchor Room this fall. For the Anchor sailing schedule calls for a series of college and fraternity nights beginning the latter part of September. These hoopla events will be presided over by Anchor's host, Victor Sampson, George Washington U. quarterback and chairman of the G. W. U. interfraternity council.

Considering the flocks of bright young singers, dancers and novelty entertainers in the drama, glee and musical clubs of the local seats of learning, the Anchor college nights should be star-studded with swell diversion. Also, there are five major nearby universities to supply both guests and talent—Georgetown, George Washington, American, Catholic and Maryland. Bon voyage, Anchor!

Two dates to paste in your hats: Wednesday, August 17 (day after tomorrow), for that "Redskin Pow Wow" on the Shoreham Terrace. All the Redskins will be there in full war paint (this probably means white linens) with Heap Big Chief George Marshall leding the war whoops.

Monday, August 22, for the opening of Hour Glass, new Vincent Gallegher spot in the Trans-Lux Building. Bebe Allen, a Paris-reared American honey blonde, will sing in French and American. We understand she's a ringer for Simone Simon. Other entertainers, too, fresh from Manhattan.

Johnny Barnes, one of the best tap dancers who ever rattled a hoof, heads the new Bamboo Gardens floor show. Johnny used to wrap bundles in an F street department store. After scoring in the 1936 "Going Native," he danced two seasons in Dave Apollon's "International Revue," has been featured in the Tony Miami night spots. Also new at Bamboo will be ventriloquist Julius Horne and the Rhythm Novelettes, a trio of pretty swing-steppers. Fire-eater Herbert Loe is held over.

There'll be two new faces in Johnny Slaughter's Metronome room orchestra this evening. They're saxaphonist Burr MacMullen, the Texas lad who was with Gene Krupa until a few weeks ago, and drummer Roy Kaiser. Both are good vocalists and will take their turns at the mike.

Mrs. Helen Hamilton, owner of the Troika, buzzed brightly into town theother dya. While catching a bit of coolness in the Rainbow Room, she said that she plans to open Troika sometime between September 30 and October 15.

* * * *

Elegant stepping and the rodeo will dominate Shoreham Terrace's new floor show. There'll be Harris and Yvonne Ashburn, ballroom dancers; Hal Sidare and Martha Kay, eccentric and acrobatic dancers. Holdovers are Bill Kirk and Grace Lawrence, who ride those midget ponies.

Society note: Barnee and Max Lowe, amusement manager of the Shoreham, are going to swing a co-operative party around midnight next Wednesday. It seems that Barnee was born late on August 17 and Max popped into this world early on August 18.

* * * *

Lotus will unveil a spang-new floor show today. There'll be a line of fresh acts and while the Chester Doherty Debbies are held over, we understand that the lassies will break out new frocks, break in new steps. Bill Strickland's dance music, singing by Marian Dawn, buzzing around by Al Norton.

Ben Sawyer as highway commissioner—Sawyer still is boss of the State's superb road system and its extraordinarily ramified patronage—serves only to point up the moral more acutely.

Quite coldly, the State's politicians believe the bluff old warrior, Smith, will die with his boots on someday in the future, and they want this Byrnes-Maybank set-up firmly established throughout the State at the time.

His classic, the use of the militia in an attempt to wrest the main patronage vehicle—the highway commission—from Sawyer's control (Sawyer was upheld in the State Supreme Court) was followed by numerous other politically unfortunate moves, including one in which he refused to sign papers committing a confessed colored rapist to the State Penitentiary until the perspiring officers, who had just maneuvered the prisoner away from a lynch-bent mob, returned 63 miles to their county seat and brought him a warrant!

Brown thus far is the third man, but still a powerful threat. As State Senate leader and former Assembly Speaker, as one of the State's leading corporation lawyers and a prominent farmer, as an intelligent, practical public official, he has built up a wider, although less powerful, organization of friends in the State. Then he has the solid backing of Sawyer and the 40,000 votes controlled or influenced through the Highway Commission, many members of the Legislature and scattered local politicians.

Somehow he is not as solidly trusted by the cotton-mill workers and the farmers, who together constitute two-thirds of the vote (the seven cities are the other third) as he is in the towns, where business, banks, and outside interests know him as a "safe man," rather than as a 100-per-cent New Dealer. Indeed, many have confessed privately to some amusement at his insistence he is 100 per cent for the President.

Registration this year is at record-breaking figures for two reasons. The enrollment, as registration is termed here, is now at 422,935 and a vote of 335,000 in the primary is forecast. The reasons are widespread interest in the race and, more important, the knowledge that representation at national Democratic conventions is to be based on the amount of the primary vote, rather than the old basis of population as represented in Congress. This is one of the two "blows at the South" struck by the 1936 Democratic convention, as it repealed the old two-thirds rule.

Colored Can't Vote.

Colored persons cannot vote in South Carolina. After the Supreme Court had invalidated a Texas statute barring colored people from the polls, the South Carolina Legislators took a careful look at their own Democratic Party qualifications. They found that:

"Every Negro applying for membership in a Democratic club, or offering to vote in a primary, must produce a written statement of ten white men, who shall swear that they know of their own knowledge that the applicant voted for Gen. Hampton and has voted the Democratic ticket continuously since."

In short, this meant that in the 1936 election a colored man attempting to vote Democratic, if 21 in 1876 and with the other routine fulfilled, would have to be 81 years old. Naturally there were not many.

The Legislature passed a statute simply providing that each party in South Carolina should be permitted to make its own rules as to voters' qualifications. Then the Democratic Party in the State issued a simple new rule that the voter must be 21 years old "and be a white Democrat." That ended that.

Budapest, Hungary, Aug. 14 (AP).—A high explosive shell, which maneuvering artillerymen forgot, killed two boys and a cow today.

Murder

Third Precinct police were called and the fighters scattered.

Sanford and three companions, Lieut. George Darnall, chief of the homicide squad, said, went to a beer parlor on Eighth street southeast. A fifth youth was taken home.

Darnall said the presence of Sanford and his companions in the beer establishment has definitely been established and that they remained there until nearly 2 a. m.

The fifth youth who went home has been questioned, detectives said, and has been cleared of any complicity. He was unable to throw any light on the affair, officers said.

Movements of the four young men when they left Southeast have been traced to Georgia avenue near Silver Spring, Darnall said.

"That's where we lose them. We just can't seem to find out what happened after that or where the shooting occurred," he declared.

Police are inclined to lean toward the theory the slaying was accidental. They said that this apparently is the best solution except for the fact that the men involved have eluded police which they probably would not do in an accidental case.

An attempted shakedown might have resulted in the slaying, detectives continued, because of the purchase of a revolver by one of the men last Wednesday. The gun purchased is the same caliber as that which killed Sanford, they said.

Because two of the youths sought have previous police records, investigators believe the gun might have been purchased for a crime foray.

"Their inexperience in handling firearms might be the explanation for an accidental shooting," Darnall said.

Investigators declared they do not believe the shooting occurred in the alley in the rear of 4511 Iowa avenue northwest, where a large pool of blood was found. They said the automobile used by the men and found abandoned in Anacostia had been cleaned but that a large bloodstain was found in the driver's seat.

Lieut. Darnall revealed his men have questioned at least 20 girls who knew the suspects.

No inquest date has been set and Sanford's body remained at the District Morgue. A jury probably will be sworn in today and the body turned over to his family for burial.

Sanford was dead early Saturday morning when he was brought into Children's Hospital by three companions and left on the operating table. The men who brought him in fled before police arrived.

Treasury's Team Wins International Revolver Tourney

Teaneck, N. J., Aug. 14 (AP).—The United States Treasury Department's No. 1 team won today the seventh annual international pistol tournament with a score of 1,192 out of a possible 1,200.

Lee E. Echols led the Treasury Department's shooters with a perfect score of 300 in slow time and rapid fire. His teammates were W. R. Rodgers, who scored 297; P. M. Chapman, 299, and Al Meloche, 296.

Gloria Stuart and Mate Rewed Just to Be Sure

Carmel, Calif., Aug. 14 (AP).—Film Actress Gloria Stuart and Scenario Writer Arthur Grant Sheekman made their marriage legally airtight today by going through a civil ceremony. They were married in Agua Caliente, four years ago, but a recent California court decision questioned legality of Mexican ceremonies for nonresidents of that country.

Sir Landon Ronald, Musician, Dies at 65

He gained prominence as accompanist to Mme. Nellie Melba, with whom he went to the United States as conductor in 1894.

To the Ladies!

Managing the American home is a business. Big Business, demanding intelligence, industry and enthusiasm.

To the ladies, the telephone is management aid #1. Much of their lives revolve around it. Calls to the shops and stores save time and energy for leisure activities. Calls to—and from—their relatives and friends make life worth living.

Handy extension telephones—for the kitchen or bedroom—are especially useful to the modern woman. And cost about two cents a day.

Arlington Post Delegates Go To Legion Meet

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST, Clarendon, Va., Tel. OXford 0509.

E. A. Golden, commander of Arlington Post, No. 138, American Legion, left yesterday, accompanied by a large delegation of members of the local post, for Charlottesville where he will attend the legion's annual State convention today.

Among the features of the convention will be a presentation of State colors to the guard of honor of Arlington Post by Department Commander Raleigh Felton.

Commander Golden is to be installed as district vice commander. Edgar W. Pumphrey, past commander of Arlington Post, will be one of the delegates to the national convention at Los Angeles in September.

The purpose of the meeting is to name 57 delegates and alternates to the Eighth District convention at Culpeper on Thursday and to elect a county chairman, vice chairman, precinct chairman and precinct committeewomen.

The County Welfare Board will meet tonight at the courthouse to consider applications for the office of superintendent, according to an announcement yesterday by Chairman Hugh J. McGrath. The appointment will be made some time before September 1.

The Industrial Promotion Committee of the Arlington Chamber of Commerce, L. C. Warner, chairman, will meet tomorrow at 3 p. m.

Efforts to stimulate industrial activities in the county are being made by the committee. The committee will report to the board of directors at the board's September meeting.

Unit No. 2, of the Ladies' Auxiliary to Arlington Hospital Association, will sponsor a benefit lawn party tomorrow night in the grove in the 2800 block of Wilson boulevard.

Mrs. Clarence W. Watts, chairwoman in charge of arrangements, is being assisted by Mrs. J. C. Boss, Mrs. Gertrude Dawson, Mrs. Maude Heys, Mrs. Carrie Gibson, Mrs. Jessie Laswell and Mrs. R. L. Edwards.

Rites Wednesday For Father Walsh

The body of the Very Rev. Dom Francis Augustine Walsh, O. S. B., Ph. D., Catholic University professor, who died Friday, will lie in State until 4 p. m. today at Ryan's funeral home, 317 Pennsylvania avenue southeast.

Requiem mass will be sung tomorrow at 9 a. m. at St. Anselm's Priory. Funeral services are to be Wednesday at 10 a. m. at the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, Catholic University. Burial will be in St. Anselm's Priory Cemetery.

21½ Gallors of Liquor Found in Fairfax Piano

A glance into the piano in the home of Lee Hicks, 35, of Gunston Neck, yielded Fairfax County A. B. C. men 21½ gallons of illegal liquor yesterday, according to Sheriff Eppa Kirby.

The raiders, headed by W. E. Dalton, found the liquor in half-gallon jars, 43 of which were concealed in the piano. Hicks was released under $1,000 bond and will appear before Judge A. C. Richie, of Fairfax County Tuesday.

U.S. Bar Names 9 to Fight for Bill of Rights

Monte M. Lemann, New Orleans, also a member of the Wickersham commission, whose report on the unenforcibility of national prohibition attracted wide attention. He was assistant chief counsel for the United States Shipping Board during the World War, was for years professor of law at Tulane University and is a former president of the New Orleans Bar Association and a former vice president of the Louisiana Bar Association. A graduate of Harvard, he is a Democrat.

John Francis Neylan, San Francisco, long general counsel of the Hearst newspapers. He is regent of the University of California and served prior to the World War as chairman of the State's Board of Control.

Joseph A. Padway, Milwaukee, Wis., and Washington, D. C., general counsel of the American Federation of Labor.

Will Investigate Hague.

The duties of the Bill of Rights Committee will be to provide impartial investigation where it is claimed that the rights and immunities guaranteed by the Constitution have been violated, and in cases where violations have been threatened or committed to provide competent counsel, if such is needed.

One of the first complaints to be turned over to the committee will involve charges against Frank Hague, mayor of Jersey City.

Chairman Clark, in a speech at the recent American Bar Association convention in Ceveland, said:

"I believe it of vital importance that the true conservatives of the country should actively organize and participate in concrete efforts to protect civil liberty against all abuses of power from whatever source those abuses come, leaving aside all considerations of party, economic and social prejudices.

"It is plain, I believe, that it is on these terms alone that there is any assurance for the future of civil liberty. And it's also plain, I submit, that any departure from this standard is in itself a danger to those very values that the conservative opinion of the country should most desire to maintain."

Praises Fight on Court "Packing."

"I wish, however, to make the suggestion that this zeal and power that manifested itself in a crisis of a year ago ought not to be permitted to lapse, but should be better organized for opposition to other attacks on civil liberty that are constantly occurring.

"Within a few months, there have been at least three instances in which civil liberties have been or might have been imperiled. These are the already mentioned brazen suppression of free speech and assembly that have occurred in New Jersey; the activities of the Senate Lobby Committee designed to harass and intimidate citizens in the exercise of their right of petition concerning legislation; and, thirdly, the proposals in Congress, now happily postponed, to establish Governmental radio broadcasting."

Peck to Head Floris Fair in Fairfax County

Community Group Names Directors for Event September 10.

Members of the board of directors are Peck, John Middleton, Jether Dove, Holcomb Rogers, W. R. Crabill, Dallas P. Hutchison, Franklin Ellmore, Wilson D. McNair, Frank Peck, Graham James, jr., and Mrs. Allan Bradley.

The fourth annual fair will be held on the Floris School grounds Saturday, September 10. Judging will begin at 10 a. m., dinner at noon, tournament at 2:15 p. m. and dancing at 8:30 p. m.

The Pioneer Grange, of Masonville, will hold a special program on highway safety tomorrow night, open to the public after 8:15 p. m. Speakers will be State Senator John Rust, State Highway Engineer Sanders and either Sheriff E. P. Kirby or some one from his office. The National Grange is sponsoring a highway safety program and is offering a gold watch and a trip to the National Grange meeting in Portland, Oreg., in November as a prize for the best essay on safety by Grangers under 18. Thelma Ankers, at tomorrow's meeting, will read the essay she is submitting in this contest.

The Merrifield Southern Methodist Sunday school picnic will be held Thursday at Glen Echo. Picnickers are to leave the church at 10:30 a. m.

Falls Church Post American Legion has decided not to elect officers until the post has adopted its constitution setting terms of office and dates of election.

Commander William Covington and Capt. Acors Thompson were chosen delegates to the national convention and Maj. Franklin Shaw and Henry Magarity alternates in a meeting at Charlottesville. Acors Thompson was named chairman of the committee on publicity.

Marshall T. Boone, chairman, Col. H. P. Sheldon, Henry P. Davis, Mortimer Palmer and J. St. Clair Cooke were named to build and set up a 1,000-inch target range for 22-caliber rifles on a site on the Lee highway between Falls Church and Fairfax, for the use of legionnaires, their sons and young men and boys of the community who desire to qualify under the rules of the National Rifle Association. The range will be under the supervision of a qualified instructor.

Mrs. Joel Miller and Mrs. Arthur Crosen have been named a committee from the Vale Home Demonstration Club to compile estimates on the cost of painting the Community Hall. Plans are being made to give a play at Oakton school house, September 16 in co-operation with the Fairview Home Demonstration Club.

At the fourth quarterly conference of the Falls Church Southern Methodist Charge, Dr. Edgar Beery, District superintendent, presiding; W. A. Fravel, H. E. Stone, G. W. Jacobs, Stewart S. Ogilvie, Eulon W. Reeve, J. E. Powell, H. R. Bauckman, Mrs. Munson H. Lane and Miss Mary Birch were elected to the board of stewards for Dulin Chapel; Hatcher H. Ankers, Jasper Robey, J. E. Cornell, Miss Pearl Dunn and Mrs. Paul Mills were named for Merrifield Church, and T. T. Taylor and Prentiss A. Shreve for Dunn Loring Church.

H. H. Ankers was added to the trustees of Merrifield Church. No change was made in the trusteeship of the other churches.

W. A. Fravel was elected general superintendent of the church school for Falls Church, assisted by Mrs. M. H. Lane in charge of the children's division; S. S. Ogilvie, young people's division; E. U. Reeve, adult division. Jasper Robey was chosen general superintendent of the school at Merrifield, with Mrs. H. H. Ankers in charge of the children's division; Miss Pearl Dunn, of young people, and H. H. Ankers of adults. Election of Golden Cross directors was deferred until the first quarterly conference of the year.

Mrs. H. C. Febrey, chairman; Mrs. Emery R. Flaherty and Mrs. M. H. Lane were selected as missionary committee for Dulin Chapel. Mrs. G. Torreyson Reeves was named representative for the home for the aged for the entire charge.

Dr. R. L. Fultz, of Falls Church, former pastor of the Waynesboro Southern Methodist Church and previously of Francis Asbury Church in Washington, will preach at his former pastorate Sunday morning, August 21, when the Rev. P. C. Helmintoller goes to his former home near Hot Springs, Va., to preach at the home coming of the four churches in the Hot Springs Southern Methodist charge.

Wood, Low-Tax Democrat, Files For Montgomery State Senator

Platform Puts 'Force Behind Pledges,' He Asserts, Saying His Faction Wholly Supports Program of Committee of 50.

Montgomery County Bureau of The Post, 9213 Clark Ave., Silver Spring, Md. Telephone SHepherd 4200.

Sumner Wood, of Chevy Chase and Gaithersburg, tax reduction Democratic faction candidate for the Democratic nomination for State Senator from Montgomery County, yesterday announced that he has filled his certificate for candidacy. He is the third member of the faction to file.

Wood's platform provides that owners of undivided property held for speculative purposes would bear a greater share of the county tax load than home owners.

"If elected we will not be dominated by any political machine or faction but instead we will be responsible to the taxpayer and controlled by the representative civic organizations of Montgomery County," Wood stated. "Our challenge, which would put politics on a purely business basis and teeth into pre-election promises has been ridiculed or ignored. The public knows that platforms, pledges and promises of politicians before or after election mean little or nothing, whereas our challenge if accepted, puts force behind pledges and rational thought into promises."

Wood pointed out that his group is neither organization nor anti-organization and that his tax reduction group had whole-heartedly agreed to support the program of the committee of 50.

He is a graduate of Harvard, a member of the bar of the United States Supreme Court and other Maryland, District and Virginia courts and is author of "Malta, Its International and Historical Aspect." He is a Mason, an Episcopalian, married and has four sons. He is the son of Mrs. Judson Wriley Jacobs, who formerly was Mrs. Octavia Byrne Wood, of Gaithersburg.

A public wedding will feature the program of the annual carnival of the Rockville Volunteer Fire Department tonight at the fairgrounds in Rockville. Miss Mary Elizabeth Shipley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Shipley, will be married to Clyde Earl Hawkins by the Rev. James W. Minter, chaplain of the Maryland State Firemen's Association. In case of inclement weather the ceremony will be performed the following night.

The carnival will continue through Saturday at the fairgrounds. A second public wedding will be held Wednesday night at the carnival, when Miss Carolyn Elizabeth Crum will be married to Charles Harold Duvall. Special features will mark each evening.

Mrs. Grace Kieth Swigget will talk on Japanese flower arrangements today at a meeting of the garden section of the Takoma Park Women's Club at 10:30 a. m. at the home of Mrs. Frederick L. Pratt, 120 Chestnut avenue, Takoma Park. Mrs. M. T. Himmelwright is chairman. An al fresco luncheon will be served after the meeting.

A meeting of Mayor John R. Adams and the town council of Takoma Park, Md. will be held at 8 tonight at the firehall, Carroll and Denwood avenues.

The annual picnic of the Takoma Park Chamber of Commerce scheduled for last Wednesday will be held this Wednesday at 5:30 p. m. in Jesup Blair Park, Georgia avenue, Silver Spring, Md.

Moler, 63, native of Jefferson County but residing here for the past ten years, who died at his home here after an illness of several weeks. He was connected with mercantile and insurance businesses in this city.

2 PWA Chiefs To Be at Parley At Maryland U.

Dr. Byrd Calls Meeting Today to Aid Officials in Getting Grants.

Harold Gray, acting Public Yorks administrator during the absence of Secretary Ickes in Alaska, and Col. M. E. Gilmore, regional director at New York City, will attend a conference of Maryland municipal and county officials at the University of Maryland today at 2 p. m.

Dr. H. C. Byrd, president of the university, called the meeting.

Dr. Byrd, who has had outstanding success in obtaining Federal grants for the university, has declared that Maryland towns are lagging behind Virginia and other States in getting their share of PWA funds. This is due, Byrd believes, to the municipal officials' lack of familiarity with procedure in applying for PWA loans and grants.

No applications will be received by the Public Works Administration officials at today's meeting, Dr. Byrd said. It is intended to be informative only.

Officials from all over Maryland are expected at the meeting, according to Byrd, who stated that more than 200 invitations had been sent out to county and municipal authorities.

Offers to organize a citizens' vigilante committee, if necessary, were made by Cheverly, Md., residents attending a town council meeting, after reports that six newly completed homes in the community had been damaged by vandals during the past two months.

Town officials, declining the assistance of the citizens unless other measures fail, ordered Patrick Noon, town marshal, to seek the co-operation of Prince Georges County police, and of people living near new and unoccupied homes in maintenance of a watch on the houses.

The break-ins seem to be the work of adults, rather than children, Mayor John Raymond Fletcher stated yesterday. The motive does not seem to be robbery, the mayor said, since most damage seems to be to plastered walls and other permanent fixtures.

Acting on complaints that delivery trucks speeding through the side streets of Cheverly were menacing the lives of small children, the council has ordered Town Clerk Harry R. Copping to write to owners of the businesses operating trucks, warning them that unless the speeding drivers are curbed, warrants will be issued for the drivers' arrest.

A moonlight cruise will be held Thursday, aboard the steamer Potomac, it was announced yesterday by J. Robert Sherwood, president of the Young Men's Democratic Club of Prince Georges County.

Arrangements for the cruise are in the hands of a committee headed by R. Earle Sheriff.

The Rev. Walter P. Plumley, jr., rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, Mount Rainier, Md., has accepted the pastorship of St. Mary's Episcopal Church, Haddon Heights, N. J.

The Rev. Plumley, who has had the Mount Rainier charge for six years, will not leave for his new post until after September 4.

Permission for installation of a pedestrian-controlled traffic light on the Baltimore boulevard at Anderson street, in Hyattsville, Md., has been granted by the State roads commission.

The mayor and council of the city applied for permission to install the light a few weeks ago, in an effort to relieve traffic congestion at the foot of the overhead bridge.

An application, made last year, by the council for a light at Marion street at the foot of the bridge, was denied by the commission which declared that it would increase hazards at the bridge. The new location is a block north of that proposed last year.

Washington's Health Budget.

Health Officer Ruhland's request for a substantial increase in his budget for the fiscal year 1940 occasions no surprise. His appeal was forecast several months ago by the announcement of a six-year health program. Moreover, the new request is in line with proposals advanced by the Health Department ever since Dr. Ruhland was brought here several years ago with a mandate to rescue the city from its unreasonable toll of death and sickness.

There is one significant difference, however, between the plans now advanced and the budgets sent to the Commissioners, the Budget Bureau and Congress in previous years. The improvements sought are now urgently recommended by the United States Public Health Service. No longer can any budgetary official or legislator conscientiously say that the proposed expenditures are unnecessary. No longer can it be assumed that there is any element of extravagance in Dr. Ruhland's persistent efforts to avert needless death and suffering.

Experts carefully investigated the public health service provided by the Capital City and found it to be woefully inadequate. Additional hospital facilities are the only alternative to continued neglect of diseases that menace the entire community. Larger staffs are necessary to operate even the existing hospitals satisfactorily. More public health nurses are needed to bring to light infectious maladies, to assist in preventing sickness and to relieve the burden on municipal hospitals by giving home care to convalescent patients.

Officials who control the affairs of Washington are now face to face with the issue of whether death shall continue to take an abnormal toll here for want of adequate public health service. The fact that cities may control their own death rates, within certain limitations, has been well established. And the highest authority on public health in the United States has said, in effect, that meager appropriations to the local Health Department in the past have brought about an abnormal waste of life.

In these circumstances, there is certainly no ground for quibbling over the additional funds which Dr. Ruhland is seeking. The impartiality and scientific attitude of the United States Public Health Service is not open to question. Hence, there is no reasonable alternative to acceptance of the program based upon its findings. Even Dr. Ruhland's six-year plan will not give the Capital the model health service it ought to have. Neglect has extended over so long a period that it would not be practical to wipe out its grim effects at once. Improvements must be extended over a number of years.

It becomes all the more important, therefore, to make provision for the first step in the 1940 budget. Failure to do so would be a humiliating resignation to disgraceful conditions that can readily be corrected.

The Second Youth Congress.

A recent canvass of Maryland youth, believed to constitute a fair sample of boys and girls throughout the country, yielded some discouraging data. The great majority interviewed seemed resigned to their generally poor success in finding self-supporting jobs; moreover, they appeared blandly apathetic to any of the several conflicting practices and theories being considered by the world to improve their lot. Bed and board (usually parental), perhaps an automobile, at least some swing music, a soda and a "date"—such were their chief concerns, and questions of politics or economics could go hang.

Whether or not their elders, as a group, would be found any more alive to the problems of the day is beside the point. What is important is the fact that not all of the country's rising generation is without sense of civic responsibility, the keystone of democracy. In New York today, for example, a group of American boys and girls is playing host at a reception for youths arriving from 36 countries of the world. Tomorrow they will move on to Vassar College, there to open the second World Youth Congress which, modeled after the congress held two years ago at Geneva, will comprise not only national delegates but also representatives from such diverse organizations as the International Federation of University Women and the Young Communist International.

Everyone interested in promoting international harmony through youth organization was invited. Thus it is significant that no Germans, Italians or Japanese accepted. Their presence will certainly be missed. They might have provided an important note of realism for the discussions of the week-long agenda which will center on political and economic organizations, as well as ethical and philosophical bases for peace. But in any event the congress promises to be a useful gathering. Its demonstration that youth can and will assume a constructive interest in the world about them is a salutary offset to gloomy reports from other sources.

Diagnosing The South.

It is well that the National Emergency Council made no effort in its report of last week to solve the dilemma of the South. If it had offered any specific plan for lifting the South out of its poverty, the valuable data it has assembled might have been lost in controversy. As the report stands, it is an excellent summary of the country's economic problem No. 1, which should encourage discussion and emphasize the need for future long-range planning.

The root problem of the South is poverty. That has long been understood. Since the NEC report is largely an elaboration of this fact, it offers little that is new. But it does bring together impressive evidence of deplorable conditions that the Nation cannot afford to ignore. The poverty of the South affects all other sections of the country. And even if it did not, the lag of economic and social progress in one large area would be an extremely undesirable condition in any democracy.

The most optimistic conclusion of the experts who made this survey is that the poverty of the South is not due to any lack of natural resources. "The paradox of the South," says the report, "is that while it is blessed by Nature with immense wealth, its people as a whole are the poorest in the country." The South has good soil. Its water resources are abundant. It has a wealth of oil, coal, water power, minerals and other resources which provide the background for a prosperous civilization.

These facts alone suggest that the problems of the South are not insoluble. Why, then, has the South failed to take full advantage of its resources? Why does a considerable portion of its people gravitate to other sections to earn their livelihood after receiving an education and spending their unproductive years in the South? Why is the supply of capital in that area so limited? Until these and similar questions are adequately answered, remedial measures cannot be intelligently discussed.

The lack of capital undoubtedly traces back to the poverty in which the South was left by the Civil War. Apparently the tenant and sharecropper systems, so costly in terms of soil fertility, have the same origin. In the Reconstruction period landowners were left without workers, former slaves and impoverished whites without jobs. The uneconomic relationship between landlords and tenants growing out of this situation has persisted. In considerable measure that is why the South specializes in two cash crops—cotton and tobacco—and fails to grow food for its own people.

The NEC laments the slow development of industry in the South. In so far as the Southern States have been handicapped in this respect by freight rate differentials, the discrimination ought to be removed. But the committee also finds meager facilities for research that might lead to the development of new industries. Have the traditions of plantation life left the South with little initiative in the development of industries? What effect does the warmer climate of that area have upon the energy expended in the establishment of new enterprises?

As to the underlying causes of the South's poverty the NEC has raised almost as many questions as it has answered. But one fact seems to be well established: the present difficulties of the South are intimately related to its history and manner of living over a long period. That does not minimize the need for changes, nor does it mean that reforms are unattainable. But it does suggest that no legislative panacea can be relied upon to rehabilitate the South and that the most effective effort may be the stimulation of new interest among the people in their own economic problems, with emphasis on modern farming methods and new industrial opportunities.

Mr. Girdler Has His Say.

In his testimony before the Senate Civil Liberties Committee, Tom M. Girdler, chairman of the board of the Republic Steel Corporation, charged the committee with having painted a one-sided picture of his company's controversy with the C. I. O.

This is a point which Senator La Follette and his colleagues should certainly take into account. Antisocial industrial practices deserve the fullest exposure, whether committed by employers or employes. But Mr. Girdler's grievance is certainly less valid, following his appearance before the committee, than it was heretofore. For while on previous occasions testimony was heard that tended to blacken the Republic Steel Corporation's reputation, Mr. Girdler has now spread on the record his own version of what happened and his own views of what ought to be done.

The long-range educational value of the committee's hearings, therefore, should prove considerable. To this Mr. Girdler himself bears witness. For after declaring that labor espionage conducted in his corporation was done without his knowledge and consent, and after stating that there was no justification for such tactics, he added that "explicit orders against the practice in Republic are now in effect."

It is fair to presume that these orders were hastened by the Senate committee's exposures. And similar exposure of any vicious practices on the part of management or labor should have a similarly constructive result. Indeed the very success the committee has had in bringing to light infringements of civil liberties from one side makes it the more obligatory to broaden the scope of investigation so as to include questionable activities in the opposing camp.

Europe's Jitters.

According to the official German news agency the fears and suspicions aroused by rumors concerning Germany's impending military maneuvers are entirely unjustified. These war games, it is explained in Berlin, will be routine and unprovocative and no different in nature from those that other great powers regularly hold.

It is to be hoped that these assurances by the Third Reich will not be belied by events. In this connection it is clearly an encouraging factor that both the London and Paris governments now profess to be undisturbed by what is going on across the Rhine.

The fact remains, however, that both the timing and the extent of these contemplated maneuvers tend to create suspicions of Germany's intentions. The Czechoslovak problem is again entering a highly critical phase. Despite Lord Runciman's efforts, the chronic tensions that for so long have existed between the Sudeten Nazis in Czechoslovakia and the Prague government may increase rather than diminish during the next weeks. Under the circumstances it is a potentially ominous development that, in the very near future, Germany will have more than a million men under arms, the largest force assembled in the Reich since 1914. And it is no less ominous that, in preparation for the maneuvers, measures have been put into force which are associated only with a general mobilization.

It may be, of course, that Hitler does not intend to use the vast army he is now assembling, which is capable of springing into action at a moment's notice, as a weapon of intimidation. But it could play precisely that role, for it would not take long to transform the simulated war of maneuvers into actual war. This is a fact which will not be lost on Czechoslovakia nor, for that matter, on Great Britain and France. Nor will the presence on the other side of the boundary of more than a million German soldiers assembled in formation, be lost on Henlein and his followers. It is not likely to induce them to moderate their demands and accept a compromise satisfactory to the Prague government.

Whatever its real purposes may be therefore, Germany's impending troop maneuvers are likely to intensify Europe's jitters.

A Sordid Case.

It is painful to add a single line to the raft of publicity which Barbara Carroll is said to be gleefully pasting into a scrapbook. But two remarks seem necessary concerning the current aftermath of the murder of a country doctor and his wife in staid old Maine. The first involves Barbara herself, something of a Jocasta in this tangled tragedy. She is reported to have just signed a contract to appear at a New York night club. That effort to capitalize upon the notoriety which this sordid case has given her is at once an indictment of herself and of the public which calls for such "entertainment."

The second point refers to the strange contradictions in the South Paris case. Last October when the crime first came to light it seemed incontestable that young Dwyer was guilty. In fact, he confessed as much although not without considerable inconsistency in his story. Now a former deputy sheriff has been convicted of the crime. The moral is plainly pointed that circumstantial evidence can never be too thoroughly investigated.

Refugees In Virginia.

From the Columbia, S. C., State.

Happy is the choice of location for the first batch of Jewish refugees from Germany, expected to arrive in this country. Some 25 families will come in under the unfilled German quota of immigrants, and will be "settled" on "Hydeland Farms," near Richmond, Va.

This group will land at Norfolk. This is not so far from Jamestown, where in the early seventeenth century gentleman and bondsman, honest adventurer and crook, learned lessons in the democracy of labor, for they had to work before they could eat. And where, but a few years later, the colony took the first steps toward the establishment of representative government on this continent, setting up their House of Burgesses.

Also this farm area, opened to these religious refugees, is not very distant from that early refuge for the persecuted of all sects, opened by Lord Baltimore on the shores of Chesapeake Bay, at a time when tolerance did not thrive in all of the American colonies.

All America should be interested in and warmly sympathetic toward this little group fleeing oppression in the old country. These unfortunates seem a strange throwback in the twentieth century to the ancestors of most of us, who in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries and on into the nineteenth century, poured into the colonies and the young United States to make homes for themselves, to live the free life, and to found and carry on our great ideal of religious and political freedom for all.

"Where do they keep getting water from to prime the pump with?" asks an editor. That's easy—they run the taxpayer through the wringer.

Rough Going.

The President And Senator George

To the Editor of the Post—Sir: Your splendid editorial "Upon What Meat" in today's Post is most timely. Can it be that our good President is contemplating a change in the spelling of his title? Of a certainty he couldn't be so equivocal.

His attack upon Senator George is obviously unprecedented in this country's history. The American people's toes are heavily calloused and they will not tolerate even their most beloved stepping on them.

CHARLES G. BOGAN, Jr.
Washington, Aug. 13.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Please accept my congratulations and thanks for your editorial "Upon What Meat?" This is the most alarming thing that President Roosevelt has done. It shows the true dictator spirit and sounds the death knell of our liberty, if it succeeds. A. H. THOMPSON.
Washington, Aug. 13.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: When Sherman marched through Georgia he did not, according to any available record, sanctify any act of warfare by calling any victim a "scholar and a gentleman." It is even a matter of great doubt that Sherman, after burning a home or cutting a throat, ever said, "God bless you." Sherman thought differently. "War is war," he said.

This morning we citizens of Georgia can look with pride (comparatively speaking), to the fact that Sherman was once a part-time resident of this State.

It is interesting, yes, amusing, to watch the game of politics from the peaks of scholarly detachment in Washington. Any "righteous indigation" is aroused only by mandefined codes of ethics. But even in the light of this consideration we remember a rule of etiquette that runs, "You shouldn't fight a man in his own backyard."

There is perhaps only one instance that could be called a precedent to the President's attempt to "hang" Senator George. It was Caesar, who "read Cassius out of Roman politics" when he learned with alarm that Cassius had the ability to think for himself. Never before had President Roosevelt called for the defeat of an incumbent Senator. "Such men are dangerous," said Caesar, meaning that Cassius was a danger to his dictatorship. Certainly, President Roosevelt feels a man dangerous who opposed his attempts to place the judicial and administrative departments of our Government under his executive control. Such an event in Government has been called a "dictatorship" by history from time immemorial. And this is what our President avowedly wishes. Is he serious when he so cordially denounces dictatorial government?

He has indorsed a candidate in this State because this man has pledged his support to the New Deal. He has denounced another for his "record"—or the parts of it disfavorable to his political monarchy. It is the old story of politics to depose a statesman in favor of a politician. It is the old story and if we condone it why not realize, at this time when a great need exists for national economy, that Congressmen come much dearer than rubber stamps. Only yesterday I saw a rubber stamp outfit for 50 cents. It contained 70-odd numbers, letters and symbols.

Arithmetic would show that the word "yes" in this set to be worth less than three cents. This stamp under the keeping of a high-priced Cabinet officer could possibly last six years. A U. S. Senator over this period of time costs the Government $100,000 at least.

PAUL LASHLEY HUDSON.
Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 12.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Permit me the liberty of taking issue with you relative to an editorial which appeared in your publication of Friday, August 12, under the heading, "My Own Party." You appear to assume the premise that Mr. Roosevelt has no right to go into one of the 48 subordinate governmental units of the national make-up and address an intrastate assembly on the national problems and policies which the present Administration is trying to put through.

Because Mr. Roosevelt has seen fit to indorse United States District Attorney Camp you take the attitude that the President is the only one "who is to determine not merely the objectives of the party but also the degree of sincerity possessed by any party candidate." The objectives of the present Administration were determined by the most overwhelming mandate of confidence ever bestowed upon a President back in the fall of 1936. He has accepted that mandate as a trust and is endeavoring to carry through the policies which the people of this country really want.

To quote another excerpt from this editorial you draw a parallel between Hitler and Roosevelt by quoting from the dictator's book, "My Battle." In this book Hitler states, "Neither Senate nor chamber will have power to make decisions" and the fact that "individual members may advise, but never decide." This parallel is utterly ridiculous. Mr. Roosevelt in no way dictated to the people of Georgia how to vote, but expressed his opinion on an issue vitally important to this whole country, that social and economic progress versus stubborn and hindsight reaction.

It is really amusing to witness the various times throughout history when a President who really did something was branded as assuming too much authority. Shortly after Lincoln had disposed of the harsh Wade-Davis bill by pocket veto because he believed it inconsistent with a benevolent attitude in framing a reconstruction policy for the South, he was bitterly criticized by Senator Wade and Representative Davis respectively and they said that, "he must understand that our support is of a cause and not a man; that the authority of Congress is paramount and must be respected . . . he must confine himself to his executive duties—to obey and to execute, not make the laws, and leave political reorganization to Congress."

Imagine Lincoln wanting to usurp the powers of Congress; the same Lincoln who said something or other about governments of the people, by the people and for the people. It must have been laughable at the time just as these present remarks about Roosevelt's dictatorial ambitions.

Lincoln freed man from political bondage; Roosevelt is endeavoring to free him from economic bondage and it is his duty to go into the States and support those who have and are willing to support him.

BENJAMIN R. STICKNEY, Jr.
Washington, Aug. 13.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It was James G. Blane, one of our greatest statesmen, who said that "The Democratic Party could always be depended upon to do the wrong thing at just the right time."

As an illustration of the above near proverb, may be cited Mr. Roosevelt's studied efforts to select a Senator for the people of Georgia and some other States. If that astonishing blunder does not redound to his everlasting discredit and political injury, then the people throughout the country have grown hidebound to an insult.

If the intelligent and fairminded people of Georgia possess even the spunk of a rabbit they will resent such interference; they will honor the conscientious man who, for his country's good, opposed Roosevelt's efforts to pack the United States Supreme Court with his "yes men."

Were the majority in Congress composed of such independent and far-sighted men as Senator George, there would be no danger of the country going bankrupt with a spendthrift in the White House.

This would be a spineless country indeed if all—the public, the courts and the Congress—agreed with our conceited head of the Democratic Party! Thank God, though, the editorial in the Post of August 12, "My Own Party," is proof that the press, at least, still is free, and the backbone yet in place!

CAPT. CHAS. H. COE.
Washington, Aug. 12.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial, "My Own Party." Thanks and congratulations. Georgia will give F. D. R. such a kick in the pants that he'll have to have them patched from Idaho to Virginia. Rah! Rah! Georgia! Sic semper tyrannis. E jo Beno. Non est combatibus.

READER.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Such vigorous and forthright editorials as yours of August 12, "My Own Party," make The Post refreshing to intelligent Americans who still believe in democracy and democratic institutions. A thousand thanks.

W. S. MEAD.
Takoma Park, D. C., Aug. 12.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial in today's Post, headed "My Own Party" was, in the first place vicious and unfair, and in the second, dull-minded. It will be difficult for you as a journalist to determine which is the worst criticism.

It is an excellent example of the fine-tooth combing indulged in by the reactionary press to find something on which to criticize the New Deal and its social objectives.

You come up with such a silly, discredited conclusion that the President is claiming the Democratic Party as "his own." Equally silly is your parallel between what Hitler has said about his ideal state and the straining, labored, roundabout comparison of this vicious philosophy to President Roosevelt's.

CHARLES E. PLANCK.
Arlington, Va., Aug. 12.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: An almost comical hypocrisy, used as a cover for its failures, has long distinguished the New Deal; from its initial tossing overboard of 1932 campaign pledges to the later growth of delusions of grandeur. But this faculty soared to new highs during the current Presidential march through Georgia, which should be a great help—to the other side.

Advocates of the New Deal and all its works—they'd still be advocates if heading toward the rocks after a shove over the cliff—like to label any criticism of the reigning governmental "power irust" as "Roosevelt hate." A species of querulous impatience and disgust can't be denied. But many critics care little which party is in power so long as it permits, does not deprive, the common man of his chance to go to work as under lesser administrations not hell-bent for reform, regardless of bankruptcy.

Arkansas Hostelry.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your issue of August 7 I notice your correspondent, Mr. Sidney Olson, refers to the Marion Hotel in Little Rock, Ark., as "old fashioned and musty."

We stayed at this hotel as late as June of this year. It is neither old fashioned, nor musty. My husband and I have stayed in the best hotels from coast to coast and the Gulf to the Great Lakes. The Marion Hotel can't be beaten for absolute cleanliness, flawless service. It is air conditioned. It is a 500-room, fireproof hotel, most efficiently managed. The furniture is comfortable. Every department of the hotel is kept up to the highest state of efficiency.

Potomac Pollution.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In an article in The Post entitled "Commissioners to Plan Ways to Clean Potomac," Commissioner Hazen is quoted as follows: "Hazen said he could not see his way clear at present to further burden District taxpayers with the cost of an enlarged plant."

Considering that 45 per cent of the cost will be borne by the Federal Government and 55 per cent can be amortized over a period of years, it would appear that the Commissioner has suddenly become tax-conscious. It is most commendable to endeavor to keep taxes down, but on the basis on which PWA grants are now obtained it would appear far less expensive to complete this plant now and free the seat of Government of the charges of polluting this beautiful river.

The Post Impressionist

Lost Chords.

RUDOLPH thumped the piano with a fat finger and his voice, following the new song, trailed from the last bar appraisingly: "Yes, we have no bananas. . . ."

The song was no good. It was a fad that might find a brief whirl at some New York showhouse, but no one would dance to it. He was still scowling about it when the postman handed me the letter.

Our opportunity had come. The servies of the All-Star Five were requested by the garage owner at Fairmont. Rudolph and I shook hands. Here was recognition; for the garage owner's reputation as an impressario was unquestioned. Above his garage was a dance hall of impressive area. Nothing short of Richmond orchestras had ever played there. No dance ever was unsuccessful there. People flocked from all the countryside to the Fairmont dances. We read the letter again, and Rudolph recalled what he had said in the beginning: that if we should make a reputation locally, they'd certainly want us on the outside, sooner or later.

That we were an All-Star Five was a fact established chiefly in large red letters on the bass drum. We didn't know how many stars we were because the organization had no cohesion. It was composed of any number of townspeople who could play one instrument or another. By entreaty or subversive manipulation, I always managed to get five of them from their wives or businesses at least an hour before a dance. All the same, we were constantly embarassed for a piano player.

Gillespie, who went to the nearby college, was willing enough. But he could play only in the key of C. After an hour of this, every number sounded alike. The only difference between the "Blue Danube" waltz and "Mr. Gallagher and Mr. Sheehan" or between "Barney Google" and "I Love You Truly," was the tempo. All was reduced to one monotonous key and couldn't be lifted out of it even by the wild obligatos and improvisations on the clarinet of the fellow who ran the feed and grain store.

The day before the Fairmont dance I became distracted. No pianist could be found. I had made what amounted to a house-to-house canvas, and was considering a telegram requesting postponement of the dance when Rudolph came, exultantly. His brother was on leave from the Navy and had brought home a Mr. Bauer, who played in the battleship's band.

Mr. Bauer was a short fellow, with a harp insignia on his uniform. Any kind of trombone would do he said, "just get an old can and I'll toot it." We went to the town's barber shop. This was a delicate business, for the barber had kept haughtily aloof from our orchestra. As we entered the shop, he sat by the stove, nursing the silver instrument. Of a sudden it went to his lips, and the round, liquid notes of "The Evening Star" flooded from the instrument's polished, golden bell. His eyes became fixed, as through the windows of the Venusberg palace, upon a bottle of bay rum on the shelf. Grudgingly, he consented to lend his trombone to Mr. Bauer.

So far, so fine—but I had a queer premonition of trouble after I asked Rudolph to tell more about our piano player. "She's a lady and she hasn't been feeling well lately," said Rudolph, "but she'll do. She's Mrs. Briggs; she's about six months with child, but she can play. The trip might jolt her a little, of course, but she . . ."

* * *

I went to Fairmont alone to make arrangements. Near twilight, the garage owner took me to the hall. The American colors hung in festoons from the rafters. Shocks of autumn corn and wheat were stacked along the walls. The floor was shined. The country people came, and the men's trousers had creases to slice a peach. But the hours passed with no orchestra.

* * *

At 11 p. m. the garage owner called me aside. The people were getting impatient and I'd better produce a band or leave town. As he spoke, an automobile pitched to the curb and an aggregation spilled out. Instruments tumbled as the car door opened. The garage owner leaped among them in a fury.

"What in hell's this you've brought me?" he screamed. "This crowd won't go in a place of mine." The countrymen, angered, milled around us. The hardware man drew his cornet from the case and started playing what sounded like "Shave and a hair cut, bay rum."

Mr. Bauer came up, talking: "Say, you know I did a hell of a thing. I left that barber's trombone in some eating joint down the road. Wonder if I can borrow one 'round here anywhere?"

* * *

The small-town orchestras began disappearing from the land. Those that didn't disappear improved. They not only improved but became business-like, and this, of course, destroyed the romance and took something else golden from this earth. Art must be served, of course, and a million small-town boys toot at the stars. But somewhere the unregenerate ghosts of corny saxophones are sobbing and a loud voice is crying from the floor:

"Feed the professor another snort and he'll play 'til the cows come home!"

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

The Closed Shop.

THE case is incomplete, but the evidence to date indicates radical opinion has fanged itself again in the case of the American Medical Association. This organization, which has some of the qualities of a labor union, is condemned for employing the same methods that are indorsed for use by unions of the C. I. O. and the A. F. of L. It concerns itself with ethics and practices and has managed to build up a rather substantial public belief that doctors who do not belong to the association or one or more of its graduated subsidiaries are declasse.

Its members may refuse to consult or otherwise co-operate with doctors who do not belong to the association or any of its subsidiaries, but they are not required to to refuse. They may break through the barrier if, in their individual judgment, the non-union doctor its a qualified man.

For practical purposes, however, it may be said that the union is in favor of the closed shop and that the members boycott those who do not belong. The avowed intention is to enforce standards of education, conduct and skill for the protection of the people, but the Department of Justice charges that in Washington the union doctors have threatened to expel and thus declass qualified men for reasons which have no bearing on their professional ability or methods.

THE DEPARTMENT claims that doctors serving a group health association composed of Government employes have been threatened with expulsion and that the same threat has been issued against members who even consult with the group doctors. Inasmuch as membership in the association or the least of its subsidiaries has come to be regarded as a certificate of professional fitness, this action would damage the reputations of the expelled men.

Its extension would stop dead the devlopment of such mass buying of medical service, an experiment in the large effort to provide adequate medical care for the poor. But it would also prevent the rich or well-to-do patient from buying first-class service for the same amount that he spends for cigarettes by joining a health group on a common footing with the poor.

The plan obviously has points which the records may view with honest alarm, and those who practice in Washington have particular reason to do so. The Naval Hospital in Washington, by distortion of an act of Congress, intended only to provide emergency hangover service for members of the two houses, is now deemed to be open to all Members of Congress and all of the Cabinet, all of whom should be able to pay first-class civilian rates for their rooms and medical and surgical care in non-service hospitals. The act merely said that there would be a Naval doctor in attendance on the Congress.

• • • •

RADICAL OPINION instinctively but rather thoughtlessly leaped to the attack on the Medical Association and has thereby indorsed in principle the very arguments that are used against certain practices of labor unions.

Labor unions use the same coercive process as the doctors in enforcing unity among their members. They condemn men to unemployment, even on some Government projects, who for any reason, including personal persecution, do not have union cards. Like the doctors, they resist efforts to reduce their pay per unit in favor of a steady annual income.

They reserve the right to expel men from union membership on grounds which have nothing to do with their ability as workmen, and they habitually operate in restraint of trade by declaring boycotts against plants, and even whole industries and geographical areas.

The doctors, to be strictly fair to them, are less exacting in such matters than the unions. They may, and some will, co-operate with nonunion colleagues who can prove their qualifications but who have reasons of principles for refusing to join the union. The labor union, however, grants no such discretion to its members in jobs where the ideal union condition—the closed shop—has been imposed.

• • • •

TO BE SURE, the maintenance of high professional rates by coercive mass action against nonconformers would be against the interest of those who are too poor to pay, but that consideration has never been given much weight in unions having to do with housing or the production of consumers' goods. And radical opinion has gone off on an astonishing tangent in defending a rebellious element of doctors who, in the code of the orator, would be classed as finks, scabs and rats.

'Down South' Opera Will Be Presented

The Columbia Light Opera Company will present "Down South" as the ninth Summer Festival program at 7:45 p. m. tomorrow at the Sylvan Theater on the Monument grounds. The company is directed by Mrs. Ethel Manning.

The Chestnut Farms-Chevy Chase Dairy Band, under direction of Edward J. Hruby, will open the program. In case of rain, the program will be postponed till Thursday night.

Employes Plan Outing.

An all-day outing will be held by the District Federation of Federal Employes Unions at the Oaks, West River Yacht Club, on Saturday. Joseph I. Stansfield, president of the federation, will award prizes for athletic and aquatic events.

Pigs Is Pigs.

"That the environment exercises a certain influence on living beings is known. Itinfluences bodily size, form, coloring and so forth . . . Two sister pigs were nourished differently. One received little to eat. The other was fattened. After 199 days the badly nourished animal weighed only about one-seventh as much as the other as we can see from the chart (above) . . . The surroundings have not triumphed . . . The inheritance has been decisive . . . In no instance up to this time have environmental influences brought about the formation of a new race. That is one more reason for our belief: A Jew both in Germany and in all other countries remains a Jew. He can never change his race by centuries of residence with another people."

Nordicism, Inward And Outward.

"A Nordic nature can very well belong to a man bodily of another race. In general, however, among a definite number of men externally Nordic, promortionately more will be Nordic in spirit and in soul than among as many men bodily of another race."

The Anti-Nordic Front.

"Even today the racial ideas of National Socialism have implacable opponents. Free Masons, Marxists and the Christian Church join hands in botherly accord on this point . . . The Christians, above all the Roman Church, reject the race idea with the citation, "Before God, all men are equal." All who have the Christian belief, whether Jews, bush niggers, or whites are dearer to them and more worth while than a German who does not confess Christianity."

Behind The Truce

By Mark J. Ginsbourg.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Shanghai, July 25.

AFTER A YEAR'S interval of armed peace, the Soviet and Japanese war machines today once again face each other across the uncertain Manchurian and Korean borders. It was thus a year ago, and two and five years ago—ever since the Japanese empire-builders launched their new vigorous continental campaign in Manchuria.

[EDITOR'S NOTE: Mr. Ginsbourg's dispatch was, of course, written before the latest border hostilities had been suspended under the terms of the temporary truce which became effective August 11.]

But the similarity to previous border troubles is only superficial. The war in China has radically changed the political and military set-up in the entire Pacific area, nullifying factors which seemed permanent yesterday and unleashing new, powerful forces.

The innumerable incidents to which the world has became accustomed in the past five years have had their roots in the Japanese army's need for funds. The Manchurian adventure entailed enormous expenditures, which in turn required generously-inclined parliamentarians in Tokyo.

It was to frighten these politicans into appropriating ever-growing amounts for military needs and to create public opinion favorable to military expansion that the Japanese army made full use of true and faked incidents along Soviet Russia's 3,500-mile frontier with Nippon's old and newly acquired colonial possessions.

The incidents, some of which were small-scale wars fought by superbly equipped little armies, occurred almost invariably in the months when the Tokyo treasury was considering the army's estimates and when the Diet was beginning to deliberate on the defense appropriations. Skilled in the manipulation of public opinion, the army calmed aroused passions quickly and efficiently as soon as the parliamentarians, alarmed by the Russian Bear's asserted designs on Japan, approved of all appropriations sought by the generals.

While each of such incidents was capable of developing into a major holocaust, neither Russia nor the world in general took them seriously for it was apparent to all that Tokyo was neither willing, nor yet prepared, to fight.

But the formula of "budget-time, trouble-time," so true in the years which preceded the current Sino-Japanese war, cannot be applied today. Thanks to the hostilities in China, the army has been generously supplied with all the required funds. Moreover, the general staff clearly realizes that a sudden demand for new enormous expenditures might easily be the straw which will break the back of Japan's weak economy. The causes of the new tension must, therefore, be sought elsewhere and their analysis must inevitably begin with the war in China.

Japanese At Home Grow Weary Of War.

THE PARAMOUNT FACTOR in Japan's domestic politics today is the people's growing weariness with war and the feverish efforts of the fighting services to bolster national morale.

When the hostilities started more than a year ago, the Japanese general staff confidently promised its people to have the insidious Chinese government and Gen. Chiang Kai-shek on their knees within three months. The nation was led to believe—and sincerely believed—that the "incident" would be brought to an end following a brief and impressive demonstration of Japanese military might in North China.

It has taken the Japanese people a long time to realize the seriousness of the war being fought in China, but the awakening was both sudden and painful. There are today weariness and a desire for peace which defy the army's efforts to keep the war enthusiasm alive.

Unrest has not yet taken an organized form, but underground rumblings of discontent are heard everywhere, from shops denuded of imported goods to the editorial columns of Japan's leading newspapers.

People Need Some Effectual Bogey

TO BRING the weary populace back into a state of jingoistic fury and unquestioning loyalty the army must present them either with a major victory or a new serious threat to the Man-In-The-Street.

Victories in China are costly. The fall of cities, no longer excites genuine nation-wide enthusiasm. Floods, heat guerrillas and the heroic resistance of ill-equipped Chinese troops makes advance difficult. Escape must, therefore, be sought in a new menace from a new, powerful foe.

But the army does not desire to go to war with Russia now. It will not fight its Soviet foe until Nippon's allies in Europe are ready to plunge into the maelstrom. Therefore, every precaution was taken to keep popular indignation within a channel designated by the army. After playing up the incident for a week, the newspapers in Japan received orders to soft-pedal, and, as by magic, the demands for a holy war on Russia came to an end.

How Has The Purge Affected Red Army?

THE DESIRE to bolster domestic morale is not the only reason for the current series of border incidents. There is also an eagerness to ascertain how far Russia will go in aiding China, as a wish to test the efficiency of the post-purge Red Army.

Fear of a Soviet attack compels the Japanese general staff to keep 300,000 to 400,000 of its picked men in Manchuria. Tokyo does not know if Moscow's understanding with the Chinese government includes active military operations. It is to determine the nature of the agreement that Japan is teasing the Russian Moujik.

If the latter refuses to give ground, Japan will be obliged to maintain her huge army in Manchuria for years to come. If Moscow shows conciliation, as it did a year ago on the Amur River, the Japanese general staff will send a part of its Manchurian force to the Yangtse Valley, where they are badly needed for a drive on Hankow.

If Russia backs down in the present dispute, she will also convince the Japanese that the series of army purges which followed the execution of Marshal Tukhachevsky had seriously undermined the fighting capacity of the Soviet war machine. And in that conviction, however erroneous it may be, lies a great danger for international peace, for it might encourage Japan to embark on a new adventure on foreign soil.

Senator George

By Ernest Lindley

Something About His 'Liberal' Record.

UNTIL the President delivered his Barnesville speech, this correspondent had never heard anyone suggest that Senator George of Georgia, was a New Deal Democrat, a progressive Democrat, or a liberal Democrat. Senator George's legal ability and those gentlemanly qualities to which the President paid his respects have made him many friends. When allowances had been made for those personal attributes, it seemed reasonable to suppose that the high esteem for Senator George manifested by conservatives of both parties was due chiefly to the fact that he was one of their kind.

But since Mr. Roosevelt has said that he does not regard Senator George as a progressive or liberal Democrat, energetic efforts are being made to prove that Mr. Roosevelt is wrong by citing Senator George's voting record. It is puzzling to find organs which, on the whole, have been critical of the New Deal program urging or implying that Senator George should be re-elected because he has voted for so many New Deal bills.

THE ATTITUDE of a Senator is not always fully revealed by his final votes on bills. It may be shown more clearly by his votes on amendments which weaken or strengthen those bills, by his votes in committee, by his public utterances and by his conversations with his colleagues. However, Senator George's voting record on the final passage of New Deal bills is sufficiently revealing.

During Mr. Roosevelt's first term, Senator George voted for nearly all the New Deal measures. There were a few important exceptions: the Guffey-Snyder coal bill, the Wagner housing bill, and, most significantly, the public utility holding company bill.

Between the 1936 election and the late spring of 1938, the main New Deal measures which were fought over in Congress were the Supreme Court bill, the wage and hour bill, the Wagner housing bill, the reorganization bill, and the farm bill. Senator George opposed every one of them except the farm bill. Admittedly the Supreme Court bill was not an accurate test either of conservatism versus liberalism or of party regularity. Drop the Supreme Court bill off the list and Senator George's record since the 1936 election is that of a man who has broken with the leadership of his party.

UNLIKE Senators Byrd, Tydings, Glass and Bailey, Senator George did not emerge as an outspoken anti-New Deal Democrat during Mr. Roosevelt's first term. His record is similar to that of another group of old-line Democrats who, on the whole, "went along" with the President for four years—perhaps merely from a sense of party loyalty, or from recognition of Mr. Roosevelt's overwhelming popularity, or because they were being fed patronage. They frequently impeded or circumscribed the scope of the reforms proposed by Mr. Roosevelt, but the substance of much of his program was enacted.

Soon after Mr. Roosevelt had been overwhelmingly re-elected, it became plain that the old-line Democrats were determined to apply the brakes to his program and to fight it out with the progressives for control of the platform and Presidential nominee in 1940. The schism in the party was clear, and the conservative Democrats made little attempt to gloss it over until Senator Pepper's easy victory in Florida indicated that Mr. Roosevelt, after all, was still the leader of the rank and file of voters.

Mr. Roosevelt's plain talk at Barnesville took courage. As a part-time resident of Georgia, he knew that Senator George is held in high respect by many Georgians. He knew that Gov. Rivers and his State machine were receiving financial aid from the same interests that were aiding Senator George. He had been informed that it looked as if Mr. Camp, the progressive Democrat candidate for Senator, would run a poor third.

• • •

THE EASY COURSE for Mr. Roosevelt would have been to abandon Mr. Camp or to speak ambiguously. Instead, he frankly asked the Democratic voters in Georgia to recognize the basic issue in their party—whether it is to be a Progressive Democratic party carrying forward the policies of the New Deal or a reactionary party. As to Mr. Roosevelt's concept of the Democratic party, there never has been much doubt. In accepting the Presidential nomination at Chicago in 1932 he not only invited the support of progressive Republicans, but said: "Here and now, in equal measure, I warn those nominal Democrats who squint at the future with their faces turned toward the past, and who feel no responsibility to the demands of the new time, that they are out of step with their party."

In 1936, Alfred E. Smith, John W. Davis and several other leading Democrats recognized that they were "out of step with their party" and supported the Republican national ticket. The single party system in the South is a deterrent to a sound political realignment.

The President has sought to lift the Democratic primary in Georgia above personalities to a high level of principle. The voters of Georgia can support both Roosevelt and George if they prefer. All that Mr. Roosevelt asked was that they realize that between his ideas and Senator George's there is as much of a gulf as there is between his and Representative Wadsworth's or Representative Snell's.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

What's Wrong With These Pictures?

Hollywood is to spend a million dollars in a goodwill campaign to bring people back into the picture houses. This is cheap enough when you consider the many millions it has spent to drive them out.

• • • •

"Movies Are Your Best Entertainment" is the slogan and it is all right with the public, provided it doesn't include those trailers advertising coming releases.

• • • •

The movie magnates have been aroused by the fact that people have been staying away from pictures in large numbers. Radio has been one big handicap and Hollywood now fears television, hence the million-dollar drive to recapture and hold public interest in magic-lantern shows.

• • • •

There is no doubt that the movies have come to stay. But have the audiences?

• • • •

The campaign will include a question and answer contest. We didn't know there was room for another question and answer contest in this country today.

• • • •

There will be a grand prize of $50,000. To compete you have to go to a movie. It seems enough money to offer, unless the movie you have to attend is one of those three-decker things: three bad pictures for the price of one.

• • • •

But if the bill includes the traditional period of boredom induced by all those snaps from future features $50,000 will be no inducement.

• • • •

A million dollars is so much chicken feed to Hollywood but the moguls could find out what's wrong with business for much less money. Number One Driver-Outer is the trailer. It is interesting to know what pictures are coming for the rest of the week, but no fan wants to see snatches from next month's supply.

• • • •

We will bet any movie magnate that more fans are kept from the picture houses by the trailer nuisance than by any other one thing. The trailers may be better than the picture but the boys should realize that the fans come to a theater to be entertained, not exasperated.

• • • •

Another point worth mentioning, is the usher evil. It is okay for those fellows to be militant, handsome and energetic, but we still think a fan should be allowed to go in the door he likes instead of the one the usher likes.

• • • •

• • • •

And the song Mr. Roosevelt sang down there was "Tenting Tonight on the Old Camp Ground."

• • • •

"Notice. If the person who took begonia from the veranda of 28 Sunnyside avenue will call in the daytime I will give them another plant just to see what such a morally depraved character looks like. He must be in a class all by himself, a degenerated specimen of the anthropoid. Charles O. Barrett."—Putnam Patriot.

• • • •

On the other hand, he may be just a fellow who wanted a begonia.

• • • •

"Police arrested 20 WPA workers when their noontime crap game was raided. Nineteen went to jail in default of $2 fines."—News item.

• • • •

That twentieth fellow must have had hot dice.

• • • •

The more you look around the world today the more you get the idea that what this planet is getting is government by jittersbugs.

Filipinos Hail U.S. Entry 'Sincerely,' Says McNutt

Manila (Monday), Aug. 15 (AP).—American High Commissioner Paul V. McNutt today termed the recent fortieth anniversary celebration of American occupation of the Philippines "one of the most impressive celebrations of any kind I have seen anywhere."

"It is not often that we see expressions of gratitude in this world, and when they come sincerely they are heart-warming."

Books And Things

By Lewis Gannett.

America's Imperial Age.

MR. NICHOLAS ROOSEVELT, former Minister to Hungary and vice governor of the Philippines, now an editorial writer on the New York Herald Tribune, formulates a political philosophy differing from those of both his Presidential cousins in "A New Birth of Freedom" (Scribners, $2.50).

The moral fiber of the American people is rotting, it seems to Nicholas Roosevelt, and a cult of dependence is replacing the old passion for independence. Children are brought up with no sense of obligation; misled by "the glitter of this mechanical age," the American people has lost its sense of elemental things and looks to the radio, the movies and the automobile to stifle its boredom; morals are decaying, the "new rich" act like irresponsible buccaneers, and in high places a program of "security" and "relief" has replaced the old faith in self-reliance, initiative and personal courage. Both business and Government have grown too big; the dead hand of bureaucracy is sapping the old adventurous instincts.

Meanwhile, a system of hidden taxation and reckless borrowing has concealed the fact that in the long run the pay roll and the tax bill must be balanced. Meanwhile, the people are being trained to believe that only a strong executive can save them, to have faith in "good dictators." Augustus, he points out, lured Rome into a faith in "good dictators," and we all know the outcome.

THE NEW FAITH in "collectivism," Mr. Roosevelt holds, is essentially reactionary. It is a return to precisely those evils which the Founding Fathers most feared, against which they most carefully safeguarded their young nation. For, he believes, collectivism cannot stop halfway; once embarked upon a program of "national planning," logic forces ever-increasing limitations of the rights of individual citizens. Collectivism, he says, is essentially paternalistic; he would substitute a system of "fraternalism."

I DOUBT that the United States is in quite as bad a way as Mr. Roosevelt fears, and his logic seems to me sometimes as weak as was Herbert Spencer's, back in 1848, when the English philosopher argued against the establishment of boards of health as a violation of the rights of the individual and a fatal step toward the slave state. We have taken many steps in "collectivism" since then, and most of us feel that those steps—public schools, parks, sewage systems and increasing regulation of business, as of street traffic—have been steps away from, rather than toward, the slave state which, like Mr. Roosevelt, we fear and detest.

Yet this emphasis on the local basis of democracy is indubitably sound. Mr. Justice Brandeis has been the most cogent opponent of this "Curse of Bigness" in our national life, but his emphasis differs somewhat from Mr. Roosevelt's. Centralization in government may be recognized as an inevitable and sanitary response to centralization in business; political decentralization is hardly possible until some other check upon industrial autocracy has been discovered.

The Federal Diary

By Scott Hart

Mrs. Gertrude Evans, of Washington, has given the United Federal Workers of America $500 to establish a memorial library in memory of her daughter, Trudy Evans. Miss Evans had been active in the Washington Labor Study Group, out of which grew the U. F. W. A. Federal Workers' School. The U. F. W. A. had for some time been considering the establishment of a labor library in its headquarters and the bequest brings the project to reality.

The Public Health Service has granted optional Q. S. and L. to all employes at marine hospitals who have families and earn $1,200 and less a year. This is the culmination of an eight months' campaign by the U. F. W. A. Approximately 400 employes in 25 hospitals will be affected by the order.

The U. F. W. A. sees it as the first major step in obtaining optional Q. S. and L. for all Public Health Service workers, and thinks it will give impetus to the Dewey Johnson bill that provides universal option Q. S. and L., a minimun salary and an eight-hour day.

J. L. Acuff, chairman of the I. D. R. A. cruise committee, says there will be a capacity crowd aboard the steamship City of Washington tonight when the Interior Department organization sponsors its first boat ride. Among the group of hostesses will be:

Dorothy Bardy and Helen Halbig, of Housing; Velma Carter and Helen Cranston, of National Parks; Grace Howard and Katherine Ale, of the Indian Office; Tommy Leady, of the Information Division; Ouida Lutes, of Territories; Janaan Leonard, Dorothy Burke, Idalon Wilson, Betty Duffer and Dorothy Richardson, of PWA, and Eve Rogers and Mollie Hershkowitz, of National Parks. On the popularity contest committee are John Wilkinson, NPS; Allen Rickets, PWA; Dave Bent, USHA; Leslie Landrum, NRC; Marion Sedberry, Reclamation, and Kenfield Bailey, Territories. On the awards committee are Howard Stinson, H. A. Tolson, Taylor Chamberlin and S. M. Barrett.

Besides the "Miss Popularity" and dancing, there will be entertainment under direction of Bobby Mahoney, of the Secretary's Office. Newspapermen will be honorary judges in the popularity contest. The winner gets a wrist watch; the runner-up gets a bouquet.

The Civil Service Commission announces examination for senior consultant in public assistance, $4,600; consultant in public assistance, $3,800; associate consultant in public assistance, $3,200, and assistant consultant in public assistance, $2,600, Social Security Board and Department of Labor. Optional subjects are: Case work, social research. There are educational and experience requirements. For the senior and full grades, applicants must not have passed their fifty-third birthday; for the associate grades the top age limit is 45, and for the assistant grade, 40. The closing date is September 6.

Anne Minter has been elected vice president of the Women's Union (N. F. F. E.), Bureau of Engraving and Printing, F. E. U. No. 105. She succeeds Mignon Miller, who was elected president. Other officers are: Gertrude M. McNally, corresponding secretary; Gertrude Scheilhorn, recording secretary; Margaret Garry, secretary-treasurer; Leo Williams, guide, and Minnie Stevens, guardian.

Agent 6-3 reports that the Quartermaster General's office in the Munitions Building is in a stew because of an order calling for a lot of night work. As a result, he says, many girls will be and are now reading specifications eight hours a day and also working several hours at night without overtime pay. The biggest gripe comes from civilians in the mechanical division, it was said. Where is all that talk about overtime that went on here a year ago? There was so much talk we thought something might be done, but not yet, it would seem.

Comes a card from likable Henry D. Billings, of Interior. He is in the Southwest United States, en route to Carlsbad Caverns.

And from the West, we heard that college students, school teachers and professional resort employes from 40 States, the District of Columbia and Hawaii are engaged in waiting on tables, making beds and carrying luggage in Yellowstone National Park.

Terming themselves "savages," these park employes, many of them fraternity and sorority members from large universities, earn spending money during the summer in one of nature's loveliest spots. The park operators say that thousands of applications from all parts of the country start to flood their offices early in winter when word gets out that approximately 2,500 positions are available in the park.

Buenos Aires, Aug. 14 (AP).—The Newspaper La Prensa today urged revision of the 1916 treaty between the United States and Nicaragua granting perpetual rights for construction of an Atlantic to Pacific canal across Nicaragua.

The newspaper declared the treaty should be modified in the interests of good will before the Pan-American Conference meets at Lima next December.

Ratified in 1916, the Chamorro-Bryan treaty gave the United States the right to build a canal, a naval base on the Pacific, and the use of Great and Little Corn Islands in the Caribbean.

The newspaper asserted revision should be the next step since the United States already has given up her right to intervene in Cuba and revised her treaty relations with Panama as part of her good neighbor policy.

Doctor Hears Heart Of Man as It Stops

Pittsburgh, Aug. 14 (AP).—Dr. Richard O. Snyder heard through his stethoscope the heart attack from which Clarence A. Zimmer died. Dr. Snyder, called yesterday to treat Zimmer, who had complained of chest pains, described the sudden end:

"The heart was beating normally, then it quit all of a sudden."

Sen. Thomas Apparently Is Unopposed in Utah

Salt Lake City, Aug. 13 (AP).—Senator Thomas entered Utah's primary race without Democratic opposition tonight as the deadline for filing petitions of nomination for the September 13 ballot passed. However, petitions bearing postmarks up to midnight Saturday will be received.

Contenders for the Republican senatorial nomination will be Dr. Arthur C. Wherry and Attorney Claude T. Barnes, of Salt Lake City, and Dr. Franklin S. Harris, of Provo, president of Brigham Young University.

Warsaw, Aug. 14 (AP).—Pro-government youth organizations paraded today in celebration of the eighteenth anniversary of Poland's victory over a Bolshevist army at the gates of Warsaw, a day in advance of the actual anniversary.

More than a hundred persons were killed on that date a year ago during a bloody rioting after peasants, who claim the 1920 victory was due to their heroic sacrifices, expressed their disapproval of government policies by a strike.

Peasants plan to reiterate their demands for new democratic electoral laws, new parliamentary elections, co-operation with western democracies and turning a cold shoulder to the authoritarian states.

Washington's Health Budget.

Health Officer Ruhland's request for a substantial increase in his budget for the fiscal year 1940 occasions no surprise. His appeal was forecast several months ago by the announcement of a six-year health program. Moreover, the new request is in line with proposals advanced by the Health Department ever since Dr. Ruhland was brought here several years ago with a mandate to rescue the city from its unreasonable toll of death and sickness.

There is one significant difference, however, between the plans now advanced and the budgets sent to the Commissioners, the Budget Bureau and Congress in previous years. The improvements sought are now urgently recommended by the United States Public Health Service. No longer can any budgetary official or legislator conscientiously say that the proposed expenditures are unnecessary. No longer can it be assumed that there is any element of extravagance in Dr. Ruhland's persistent efforts to avert needless death and suffering.

Experts carefully investigated the public health service provided by the Capital City and found it to be woefully inadequate. Additional hospital facilities are the only alternative to continued neglect of diseases that menace the entire community. Larger staffs are necessary to operate even the existing hospitals satisfactorily. More public health nurses are needed to bring to light infectious maladies, to assist in preventing sickness and to relieve the burden on municipal hospitals by giving home care to convalescent patients.

Officials who control the affairs of Washington are now face to face with the issue of whether death shall continue to take an abnormal toll here for want of adequate public health service. The fact that cities may control their own death rates, within certain limitations, has been well established. And the highest authority on public health in the United States has said, in effect, that meager appropriations to the local Health Department in the past have brought about an abnormal waste of life.

In these circumstances, there is certainly no ground for quibbling over the additional funds which Dr. Ruhland is seeking. The impartiality and scientific attitude of the United States Public Health Service is not open to question. Hence, there is no reasonable alternative to acceptance of the program based upon its findings. Even Dr. Ruhland's six-year plan will not give the Capital the model health service it ought to have. Neglect has extended over so long a period that it would not be practical to wipe out its grim effects at once. Improvements must be extended over a number of years.

It becomes all the more important, therefore, to make provision for the first step in the 1940 budget. Failure to do so would be a humiliating resignation to disgraceful conditions that can readily be corrected.

The Second Youth Congress.

A recent canvass of Maryland youth, believed to constitute a fair sample of boys and girls throughout the country, yielded some discouraging data. The great majority interviewed seemed resigned to their generally poor success in finding self-supporting jobs; moreover, they appeared blandly apathetic to any of the several conflicting practices and theories being considered by the world to improve their lot. Bed and board (usually parental), perhaps an automobile, at least some swing music, a soda and a "date"—such were their chief concerns, and questions of politics or economics could go hang.

Whether or not their elders, as a group, would be found any more alive to the problems of the day is beside the point. What is important is the fact that not all of the country's rising generation is without sense of civic responsibility, the keystone of democracy. In New York today, for example, a group of American boys and girls is playing host at a reception for youths arriving from 36 countries of the world. Tomorrow they will move on to Vassar College, there to open the second World Youth Congress which, modeled after the congress held two years ago at Geneva, will comprise not only national delegates but also representatives from such diverse organizations as the International Federation of University Women and the Young Communist International.

Everyone interested in promoting international harmony through youth organization was invited. Thus it is significant that no Germans, Italians or Japanese accepted. Their presence will certainly be missed. They might have provided an important note of realism for the discussions of the week-long agenda which will center on political and economic organizations, as well as ethical and philosophical bases for peace. But in any event the congress promises to be a useful gathering. Its demonstration that youth can and will assume a constructive interest in the world about them is a salutary offset to gloomy reports from other sources.

Diagnosing The South.

It is well that the National Emergency Council made no effort in its report of last week to solve the dilemma of the South. If it had offered any specific plan for lifting the South out of its poverty, the valuable data it has assembled might have been lost in controversy. As the report stands, it is an excellent summary of the country's economic problem No. 1, which should encourage discussion and emphasize the need for future long-range planning.

The root problem of the South is poverty. That has long been understood. Since the NEC report is largely an elaboration of this fact, it offers little that is new. But it does bring together impressive evidence of deplorable conditions that the Nation cannot afford to ignore. The poverty of the South affects all other sections of the country. And even if it did not, the lag of economic and social progress in one large area would be an extremely undesirable condition in any democracy.

The most optimistic conclusion of the experts who made this survey is that the poverty of the South is not due to any lack of natural resources. "The paradox of the South," says the report, "is that while it is blessed by Nature with immense wealth, its people as a whole are the poorest in the country." The South has good soil. Its water resources are abundant. It has a wealth of oil, coal, water power, minerals and other resources which provide the background for a prosperous civilization.

These facts alone suggest that the problems of the South are not insoluble. Why, then, has the South failed to take full advantage of its resources? Why does a considerable portion of its people gravitate to other sections to earn their livelihood after receiving an education and spending their unproductive years in the South? Why is the supply of capital in that area so limited? Until these and similar questions are adequately answered, remedial measures cannot be intelligently discussed.

The lack of capital undoubtedly traces back to the poverty in which the South was left by the Civil War. Apparently the tenant and sharecropper systems, so costly in terms of soil fertility, have the same origin. In the Reconstruction period landowners were left without workers, former slaves and impoverished whites without jobs. The uneconomic relationship between landlords and tenants growing out of this situation has persisted. In considerable measure that is why the South specializes in two cash crops—cotton and tobacco—and fails to grow food for its own people.

The NEC laments the slow development of industry in the South. In so far as the Southern States have been handicapped in this respect by freight rate differentials, the discrimination ought to be removed. But the committee also finds meager facilities for research that might lead to the development of new industries. Have the traditions of plantation life left the South with little initiative in the development of industries? What effect does the warmer climate of that area have upon the energy expended in the establishment of new enterprises?

As to the underlying causes of the South's poverty the NEC has raised almost as many questions as it has answered. But one fact seems to be well established: the present difficulties of the South are intimately related to its history and manner of living over a long period. That does not minimize the need for changes, nor does it mean that reforms are unattainable. But it does suggest that no legislative panacea can be relied upon to rehabilitate the South and that the most effective effort may be the stimulation of new interest among the people in their own economic problems, with emphasis on modern farming methods and new industrial opportunities.

Mr. Girdler Has His Say.

In his testimony before the Senate Civil Liberties Committee, Tom M. Girdler, chairman of the board of the Republic Steel Corporation, charged the committee with having painted a one-sided picture of his company's controversy with the C. I. O.

This is a point which Senator La Follette and his colleagues should certainly take into account. Antisocial industrial practices deserve the fullest exposure, whether committed by employers or employes. But Mr. Girdler's grievance is certainly less valid, following his appearance before the committee, than it was heretofore. For while on previous occasions testimony was heard that tended to blacken the Republic Steel Corporation's reputation, Mr. Girdler has now spread on the record his own version of what happened and his own views of what ought to be done.

The long-range educational value of the committee's hearings, therefore, should prove considerable. To this Mr. Girdler himself bears witness. For after declaring that labor espionage conducted in his corporation was done without his knowledge and consent, and after stating that there was no justification for such tactics, he added that "explicit orders against the practice in Republic are now in effect."

It is fair to presume that these orders were hastened by the Senate committee's exposures. And similar exposure of any vicious practices on the part of management or labor should have a similarly constructive result. Indeed the very success the committee has had in bringing to light infringements of civil liberties from one side makes it the more obligatory to broaden the scope of investigation so as to include questionable activities in the opposing camp.

Europe's Jitters.

According to the official German news agency the fears and suspicions aroused by rumors concerning Germany's impending military maneuvers are entirely unjustified. These war games, it is explained in Berlin, will be routine and unprovocative and no different in nature from those that other great powers regularly hold.

It is to be hoped that these assurances by the Third Reich will not be belied by events. In this connection it is clearly an encouraging factor that both the London and Paris governments now profess to be undisturbed by what is going on across the Rhine.

The fact remains, however, that both the timing and the extent of these contemplated maneuvers tend to create suspicions of Germany's intentions. The Czechoslovak problem is again entering a highly critical phase. Despite Lord Runciman's efforts, the chronic tensions that for so long have existed between the Sudeten Nazis in Czechoslovakia and the Prague government may increase rather than diminish during the next weeks. Under the circumstances it is a potentially ominous development that, in the very near future, Germany will have more than a million men under arms, the largest force assembled in the Reich since 1914. And it is no less ominous that, in preparation for the maneuvers, measures have been put into force which are associated only with a general mobilization.

It may be, of course, that Hitler does not intend to use the vast army he is now assembling, which is capable of springing into action at a moment's notice, as a weapon of intimidation. But it could play precisely that role, for it would not take long to transform the simulated war of maneuvers into actual war. This is a fact which will not be lost on Czechoslovakia nor, for that matter, on Great Britain and France. Nor will the presence on the other side of the boundary of more than a million German soldiers assembled in formation, be lost on Henlein and his followers. It is not likely to induce them to moderate their demands and accept a compromise satisfactory to the Prague government.

Whatever its real purposes may be therefore, Germany's impending troop maneuvers are likely to intensify Europe's jitters.

A Sordid Case.

It is painful to add a single line to the raft of publicity which Barbara Carroll is said to be gleefully pasting into a scrapbook. But two remarks seem necessary concerning the current aftermath of the murder of a country doctor and his wife in staid old Maine. The first involves Barbara herself, something of a Jocasta in this tangled tragedy. She is reported to have just signed a contract to appear at a New York night club. That effort to capitalize upon the notoriety which this sordid case has given her is at once an indictment of herself and of the public which calls for such "entertainment."

The second point refers to the strange contradictions in the South Paris case. Last October when the crime first came to light it seemed incontestable that young Dwyer was guilty. In fact, he confessed as much although not without considerable inconsistency in his story. Now a former deputy sheriff has been convicted of the crime. The moral is plainly pointed that circumstantial evidence can never be too thoroughly investigated.

Refugees In Virginia.

From the Columbia, S. C., State.

Happy is the choice of location for the first batch of Jewish refugees from Germany, expected to arrive in this country. Some 25 families will come in under the unfilled German quota of immigrants, and will be "settled" on "Hydeland Farms," near Richmond, Va.

This group will land at Norfolk. This is not so far from Jamestown, where in the early seventeenth century gentleman and bondsman, honest adventurer and crook, learned lessons in the democracy of labor, for they had to work before they could eat. And where, but a few years later, the colony took the first steps toward the establishment of representative government on this continent, setting up their House of Burgesses.

Also this farm area, opened to these religious refugees, is not very distant from that early refuge for the persecuted of all sects, opened by Lord Baltimore on the shores of Chesapeake Bay, at a time when tolerance did not thrive in all of the American colonies.

All America should be interested in and warmly sympathetic toward this little group fleeing oppression in the old country. These unfortunates seem a strange throwback in the twentieth century to the ancestors of most of us, who in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries and on into the nineteenth century, poured into the colonies and the young United States to make homes for themselves, to live the free life, and to found and carry on our great ideal of religious and political freedom for all.

The President And Senator George

To the Editor of the Post—Sir: Your splendid editorial "Upon What Meat" in today's Post is most timely. Can it be that our good President is contemplating a change in the spelling of his title? Of a certainty he couldn't be so equivocal.

His attack upon Senator George is obviously unprecedented in this country's history. The American people's toes are heavily calloused and they will not tolerate even their most beloved stepping on them.

CHARLES G. BOGAN, Jr.
Washington, Aug. 13.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Please accept my congratulations and thanks for your editorial "Upon What Meat?" This is the most alarming thing that President Roosevelt has done. It shows the true dictator spirit and sounds the death knell of our liberty, if it succeeds. A. H. THOMPSON.
Washington, Aug. 13.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: When Sherman marched through Georgia he did not, according to any available record, sanctify any act of warfare by calling any victim a "scholar and a gentleman." It is even a matter of great doubt that Sherman, after burning a home or cutting a throat, ever said, "God bless you." Sherman thought differently. "War is war," he said.

This morning we citizens of Georgia can look with pride (comparatively speaking), to the fact that Sherman was once a part-time resident of this State.

It is interesting, yes, amusing, to watch the game of politics from the peaks of scholarly detachment in Washington. Any "righteous indigation" is aroused only by mandefined codes of ethics. But even in the light of this consideration we remember a rule of etiquette that runs, "You shouldn't fight a man in his own backyard."

There is perhaps only one instance that could be called a precedent to the President's attempt to "hang" Senator George. It was Caesar, who "read Cassius out of Roman politics" when he learned with alarm that Cassius had the ability to think for himself. Never before had President Roosevelt called for the defeat of an incumbent Senator. "Such men are dangerous," said Caesar, meaning that Cassius was a danger to his dictatorship. Certainly, President Roosevelt feels a man dangerous who opposed his attempts to place the judicial and administrative departments of our Government under his executive control. Such an event in Government has been called a "dictatorship" by history from time immemorial. And this is what our President avowedly wishes. Is he serious when he so cordially denounces dictatorial government?

He has indorsed a candidate in this State because this man has pledged his support to the New Deal. He has denounced another for his "record"—or the parts of it disfavorable to his political monarchy. It is the old story of politics to depose a statesman in favor of a politician. It is the old story and if we condone it why not realize, at this time when a great need exists for national economy, that Congressmen come much dearer than rubber stamps. Only yesterday I saw a rubber stamp outfit for 50 cents. It contained 70-odd numbers, letters and symbols.

Arithmetic would show that the word "yes" in this set to be worth less than three cents. This stamp under the keeping of a high-priced Cabinet officer could possibly last six years. A U. S. Senator over this period of time costs the Government $100,000 at least.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Permit me the liberty of taking issue with you relative to an editorial which appeared in your publication of Friday, August 12, under the heading, "My Own Party." You appear to assume the premise that Mr. Roosevelt has no right to go into one of the 48 subordinate governmental units of the national make-up and address an intrastate assembly on the national problems and policies which the present Administration is trying to put through.

Because Mr. Roosevelt has seen fit to indorse United States District Attorney Camp you take the attitude that the President is the only one "who is to determine not merely the objectives of the party but also the degree of sincerity possessed by any party candidate." The objectives of the present Administration were determined by the most overwhelming mandate of confidence ever bestowed upon a President back in the fall of 1936. He has accepted that mandate as a trust and is endeavoring to carry through the policies which the people of this country really want.

To quote another excerpt from this editorial you draw a parallel between Hitler and Roosevelt by quoting from the dictator's book, "My Battle." In this book Hitler states, "Neither Senate nor chamber will have power to make decisions" and the fact that "individual members may advise, but never decide." This parallel is utterly ridiculous. Mr. Roosevelt in no way dictated to the people of Georgia how to vote, but expressed his opinion on an issue vitally important to this whole country, that social and economic progress versus stubborn and hindsight reaction.

It is really amusing to witness the various times throughout history when a President who really did something was branded as assuming too much authority. Shortly after Lincoln had disposed of the harsh Wade-Davis bill by pocket veto because he believed it inconsistent with a benevolent attitude in framing a reconstruction policy for the South, he was bitterly criticized by Senator Wade and Representative Davis respectively and they said that, "he must understand that our support is of a cause and not a man; that the authority of Congress is paramount and must be respected . . . he must confine himself to his executive duties—to obey and to execute, not make the laws, and leave political reorganization to Congress."

Imagine Lincoln wanting to usurp the powers of Congress; the same Lincoln who said something or other about governments of the people, by the people and for the people. It must have been laughable at the time just as these present remarks about Roosevelt's dictatorial ambitions.

Lincoln freed man from political bondage; Roosevelt is endeavoring to free him from economic bondage and it is his duty to go into the States and support those who have and are willing to support him.

BENJAMIN R. STICKNEY, Jr.
Washington, Aug. 13.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It was James G. Blane, one of our greatest statesmen, who said that "The Democratic Party could always be depended upon to do the wrong thing at just the right time."

As an illustration of the above near proverb, may be cited Mr. Roosevelt's studied efforts to select a Senator for the people of Georgia and some other States. If that astonishing plunder does not redound to his everlasting discredit and political injury, then the people throughout the country have grown hidebound to an insult.

If the intelligent and fairminded people of Georgia possess even the spunk of a rabbit they will resent such interference; they will honor the conscientious man who, for his country's good, opposed Roosevelt's efforts to pack the United States Supreme Court with his "yes men."

Were the majority in Congress composed of such independent and far-sighted men as Senator George, there would be no danger of the country going bankrupt with a spendthrift in the White House.

This would be a spineless country indeed if all—the public, the courts and the Congress—agreed with our conceited head of the Democratic Party! Thank God, though, the editorial in the Post of August 12, "My Own Party," is proof that the press, at least, still is free, and the backbone yet in place!

CAPT. CHAS. H. COE.
Washington, Aug. 12.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial, "My Own Party." Thanks and congratulations. Georgia will give F. D. R. such a kick in the pants that he'll have to have them patched from Idaho to Virginia. Rah! Rah! Georgia! Sic semper tyrannis. E jo Beno. Non est combatibus. READER.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Such vigorous and forthright editorials as yours of August 12, "My Own Party," make The Post refreshing to intelligent Americans who still believe in democracy and democratic institutions. A thousand thanks. W. S. MEAD.
Takoma Park, D. C., Aug. 12.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial in today's Post, headed "My Own Party" was, in the first place vicious and unfair, and in the second, dull-minded. It will be difficult for you as a journalist to determine which is the worst criticism.

It is an excellent example of the fine-tooth combing indulged in by the reactionary press to find something on which to criticize the New Deal and its social objectives.

You come up with such a silly, discredited conclusion that the President is claiming the Democratic Party as "his own." Equally silly is your parallel between what Hitler has said about his ideal state and the straining, labored, roundabout comparison of this vicious philosophy to President Roosevelt's.

CHARLES E. PLANCK.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: An almost comical hypocrisy, used as a cover for its failures, has long distinguished the New Deal; from its initial tossing overboard of 1932 campaign pledges to the later growth of delusions of grandeur. But this faculty soared to new highs during the current Presidential march through Georgia, which should be a great help—to the other side.

Advocates of the New Deal and all its works—they'd still be advocates if heading toward the rocks after a shove over the cliff—like to label any criticism of the reigning governmental "power trust" as "Roosevelt hate." A species of querulous impatience and disgust can't be denied. But many critics care little which party is in power so long as it permits, does not deprive, the common man of his chance to go to work as under lesser administrations not hell-bent for reform, regardless of bankruptcy.

Arkansas Hostelry.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your issue of August 7 I notice your correspondent, Mr. Sidney Olson, refers to the Marion Hotel in Little Rock, Ark., as "old fashioned and musty."

We stayed at this hotel as late as June of this year. It is neither old fashioned, nor musty. My husband and I have stayed in the best hotels from coast to coast and the Gulf to the Great Lakes. The Marion Hotel can't be beaten for absolute cleanliness, flawless service. It is air conditioned. It is a 500-room, fireproof hotel, most efficiently managed. The furniture is comfortable. Every department of the hotel is kept up to the highest state of efficiency. MRS. E. S. GARNETT.

Potomac Pollution.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In an article in The Post entitled "Commissioners to Plan Ways to Clean Potomac," Commissioner Hazen is quoted as follows: "Hazen said he could not see his way clear at present to further burden District taxpayers with the cost of an enlarged plant."

Considering that 45 per cent of the cost will be borne by the Federal Government and 55 per cent can be amortized over a period of years, it would appear that the Commissioner has suddenly become tax-conscious. It is most commendable to endeavor to keep taxes down, but on the basis on which PWA grants are now obtained it would appear far less expensive to complete this plant now and free the seat of Government of the charges of polluting this beautiful river. The Post Impressionist

Lost Chords.

RUDOLPH thumped the piano with a fat finger and his voice, following the new song, trailed from the last bar appraisingly: "Yes, we have no bananas. . . ."

The song was no good. It was a fad that might find a brief whirl at some New York showhouse, but no one would dance to it. He was still scowling about it when the postman handed me the letter.

Our opportunity had come. The servies of the All-Star Five were requested by the garage owner at Fairmont. Rudolph and I shook hands. Here was recognition; for the garage owner's reputation as an impressario was unquestioned. Above his garage was a dance hall of impressive area. Nothing short of Richmond orchestras had ever played there. No dance ever was unsuccessful there. People flocked from all the countryside to the Fairmont dances. We read the letter again, and Rudolph recalled what he had said in the beginning: that if we should make a reputation locally, they'd certainly want us on the outside, sooner or later.

That we were an All-Star Five was a fact established chiefly in large red letters on the bass drum. We didn't know how many stars we were because the organization had no cohesion. It was composed of any number of townspeople who could play one instrument or another. By entreaty or subversive manipulation, I always managed to get five of them from their wives or businesses at least an hour before a dance. All the same, we were constantly embarassed for a piano player.

Gillespie, who went to the nearby college, was willing enough. But he could play only in the key of C. After an hour of this, every number sounded alike. The only difference between the "Blue Danube" waltz and "Mr. Gallagher and Mr. Sheehan" or between "Barney Google" and "I Love You Truly," was the tempo. All was reduced to one monotonous key and couldn't be lifted out of it even by the wild obligatos and improvisations on the clarinet of the fellow who ran the feed and grain store.

The day before the Fairmont dance I became distracted. No pianist could be found. I had made what amounted to a house-to-house canvas, and was considering a telegram requesting postponement of the dance when Rudolph came, exultantly. His brother was on leave from the Navy and had brought home a Mr. Bauer, who played in the battleship's band.

Mr. Bauer was a short fellow, with a harp insignia on his uniform. Any kind of trombone would do he said, "just get an old can and I'll toot it." We went to the town's barber shop. This was a delicate business, for the barber had kept haughtily aloof from our orchestra. As we entered the shop, he sat by the stove, nursing the silver instrument. Of a sudden it went to his lips, and the round, liquid notes of "The Evening Star" flooded from the instrument's polished, golden bell. His eyes became fixed, as through the windows of the Venusberg palace, upon a bottle of bay rum on the shelf. Grudgingly, he consented to lend his trombone to Mr. Bauer.

So far, so fine—but I had a queer premonition of trouble after I asked Rudolph to tell more about our piano player. "She's a lady and she hasn't been feeling well lately," said Rudolph, "but she'll do. She's Mrs. Briggs; she's about six months with child, but she can play. The trip might jolt her a little, of course, but she . . ."

I went to Fairmont alone to make arrangements. Near twilight, the garage owner took me to the hall. The American colors hung in festoons from the rafters. Shocks of autumn corn and wheat were stacked along the walls. The floor was shined. The country people came, and the men's trousers had creases to slice a peach. But the hours passed with no orchestra.

* * *

At 11 p. m. the garage owner called me aside. The people were getting impatient and I'd better produce a band or leave town. As he spoke, an automobile pitched to the curb and an aggregation spilled out. Instruments tumbled as the car door opened. The garage owner leaped among them in a fury.

"What in hell's this you've brought me?" he screamed. "This crowd won't go in a place of mine." The countrymen, angered, milled around us. The hardware man drew his cornet from the case and started playing what sounded like "Shave and a hair cut, bay rum."

Mr. Bauer came up, talking: "Say, you know I did a hell of a thing. I left that barber's trombone in some eating joint down the road. Wonder if I can borrow one 'round here anywhere?"

* * *

The small-town orchestras began disappearing from the land. Those that didn't disappear improved. They not only improved but became business-like, and this, of course, destroyed the romance and took something else golden from this earth. Art must be served, of course, and a million small-town boys toot at the stars. But somewhere the unregenerate ghosts of corny saxophones are sobbing and a loud voice is crying from the floor:

"Feed the professor another snort and he'll play 'til the cows come home!" SCOTT HART.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

The Closed Shop.

THE case is incomplete, but the evidence to date indicates radical opinion has fanged itself again in the case of the American Medical Association. This organization, which has some of the qualities of a labor union, is condemned for employing the same methods that are indorsed for use by unions of the C. I. O. and the A. F. of L. It concerns itself with ethics and practices and has managed to build up a rather substantial public belief that doctors who do not belong to the association or one or more of its graduated subsidiaries are declasse.

Its members may refuse to consult or otherwise co-operate with doctors who do not belong to the association or any of its subsidiaries, but they are not required to to refuse. They may break through the barrier if, in their individual judgment, the non-union doctor its a qualified man.

For practical purposes, however, it may be said that the union is in favor of the closed shop and that the members boycott those who do not belong. The avowed intention is to enforce standards of education, conduct and skill for the protection of the people, but the Department of Justice charges that in Washington the union doctors have threatened to expel and thus declass qualified men for reasons which have no bearing on their professional ability or methods.

THE DEPARTMENT claims that doctors serving a group health association composed of Government employes have been threatened with expulsion and that the same threat has been issued against members who even consult with the group doctors. Inasmuch as membership in the association or the least of its subsidiaries has come to be regarded as a certificate of professional fitness, this action would damage the reputations of the expelled men.

Its extension would stop dead the devlopment of such mass buying of medical service, an experiment in the large effort to provide adequate medical care for the poor. But it would also prevent the rich or well-to-do patient from buying first-class service for the same amount that he spends for cigarettes by joining a health group on a common footing with the poor.

The plan obviously has points which the records may view with honest alarm, and those who practice in Washington have particular reason to do so. The Naval Hospital in Washington, by distortion of an act of Congress, intended only to provide emergency hangover service for members of the two houses, is now deemed to be open to all Members of Congress and all of the Cabinet, all of whom should be able to pay first-class civilian rates for their rooms and medical and surgical care in non-service hospitals. The act merely said that there would be a Naval doctor in attendance on the Congress.

RADICAL OPINION instinctively but rather thoughtlessly leaped to the attack on the Medical Association and has thereby indorsed in principle the very arguments that are used against certain practices of labor unions.

Labor unions use the same coercive process as the doctors in enforcing unity among their members. They condemn men to unemployment, even on some Government projects, who for any reason, including personal persecution, do not have union cards. Like the doctors, they resist efforts to reduce their pay per unit in favor of a steady annual income.

They reserve the right to expel men from union membership on grounds which have nothing to do with their ability as workmen, and they habitually operate in restraint of trade by declaring boycotts against plants, and even whole industries and geographical areas.

The doctors, to be strictly fair to them, are less exacting in such matters than the unions. They may, and some will, co-operate with nonunion colleagues who can prove their qualifications but who have reasons of principles for refusing to join the union. The labor union, however, grants no such discretion to its members in jobs where the ideal union condition—the closed shop—has been imposed.

* * * *

TO BE SURE, the maintenance of high professional rates by coercive mass action against nonconformers would be against the interest of those who are too poor to pay, but that consideration has never been given much weight in unions having to do with housing or the production of consumers' goods. And radical opinion has gone off on an astonishing tangent in defending a rebellious element of doctors who, in the code of the orator, would be classed as finks, scabs and rats.

Pigs Is Pigs.

"That the environment exercises a certain influence on living beings is known. Itinfluences bodily size, form, coloring and so forth . . . Two sister pigs were nourished differently. One received little to eat. The other was fattened. After 199 days the badly nourished animal weighed only about one-seventh as much as the other as we can see from the chart (above) . . . The surroundings have not triumphed . . . The inheritance has been decisive . . . In no instance up to this time have environmental influences brought about the formation of a new race. That is one more reason for our belief: A Jew both in Germany and in all other countries remains a Jew. He can never change his race by centuries of residence with another people."

Nordicism, Inward And Outward.

"A Nordic nature can very well belong to a man bodily of another race. In general, however, among a definite number of men externally Nordic, promortionately more will be Nordic in spirit and in soul than among as many men bodily of another race."

The Anti-Nordic Front.

"Even today the racial ideas of National Socialism have implacable opponents. Free Masons, Marxists and the Christian Church join hands in botherly accord on this point . . . The Christians, above all the Roman Church, reject the race idea with the citation, "Before God, all men are equal." All who have the Christian belief, whether Jews, bush niggers, or whites are dearer to them and more worth while than a German who does not confess Christianity."

Behind The Truce

By Mark J. Ginsbourg.

AFTER A YEAR'S interval of armed peace, the Soviet and Japanese war machines today once again face each other across the uncertain Manchurian and Korean borders. It was thus a year ago, and two and five years ago—ever since the Japanese empire-builders launched their new vigorous continental campaign in Manchuria.

[EDITOR'S NOTE: Mr. Ginsbourg's dispatch was, of course, written before the latest border hostilities had been suspended under the terms of the temporary truce which became effective August 11.]

But the similarity to previous border troubles is only superficial. The war in China has radically changed the political and military set-up in the entire Pacific area, nullifying factors which seemed permanent yesterday and unleashing new, powerful forces.

The innumerable incidents to which the world has became accustomed in the past five years have had their roots in the Japanese army's need for funds. The Manchurian adventure entailed enormous expenditures, which in turn required generously-inclined parliamentarians in Tokyo.

It was to frighten these politicans into appropriating ever-growing amounts for military needs and to create public opinion favorable to military expansion that the Japanese army made full use of true and faked incidents along Soviet Russia's 3,500-mile frontier with Nippon's old and newly acquired colonial possessions.

The incidents, some of which were small-scale wars fought by superbly equipped little armies, occurred almost invariably in the months when the Tokyo treasury was considering the army's estimates and when the Diet was beginning to deliberate on the defense appropriations. Skilled in the manipulation of public opinion, the army calmed aroused passions quickly and efficiently as soon as the parliamentarians, alarmed by the Russian Bear's asserted designs on Japan, approved of all appropriations sought by the generals.

While each of such incidents was capable of developing into a major holocaust, neither Russia nor the world in general took them seriously for it was apparent to all that Tokyo was neither willing, nor yet prepared, to fight.

But the formula of "budget-time, trouble-time," so true in the years which preceded the current Sino-Japanese war, cannot be applied today. Thanks to the hostilities in China, the army has been generously supplied with all the required funds. Moreover, the general staff clearly realizes that a sudden demand for new enormous expenditures might easily be the straw which will break the back of Japan's weak economy. The causes of the new tension must, therefore, be sought elsewhere and their analysis must inevitably begin with the war in China.

Japanese At Home Grow Weary Of War.

THE PARAMOUNT FACTOR in Japan's domestic politics today is the people's growing weariness with war and the feverish efforts of the fighting services to bolster national morale.

When the hostilities started more than a year ago, the Japanese general staff confidently promised its people to have the insidious Chinese government and Gen. Chiang Kai-shek on their knees within three months. The nation was led to believe—and sincerely believed—that the "incident" would be brought to an end following a brief and impressive demonstration of Japanese military might in North China.

It has taken the Japanese people a long time to realize the seriousness of the war being fought in China, but the awakening was both sudden and painful. There are today weariness and a desire for peace which defy the army's efforts to keep the war enthusiasm alive.

Unrest has not yet taken an organized form, but underground rumblings of discontent are heard everywhere, from shops denuded of imported goods to the editorial columns of Japan's leading newspapers.

People Need Some Effectual Bogey

TO BRING the weary populace back into a state of jingoistic fury and unquestioning loyalty the army must present them either with a major victory or a new serious threat to the Man-In-The-Street.

Victories in China are costly. The fall of cities, no longer excites genuine nation-wide enthusiasm. Floods, heat guerrillas and the heroic resistance of ill-equipped Chinese troops makes advance difficult. Escape must, therefore, be sought in a new menace from a new, powerful foe.

But the army does not desire to go to war with Russia now. It will not fight its Soviet foe until Nippon's allies in Europe are ready to plunge into the maelstrom. Therefore, every precaution was taken to keep popular indignation within a channel designated by the army. After playing up the incident for a week, the newspapers in Japan received orders to soft-pedal, and, as by magic, the demands for a holy war on Russia came to an end.

How Has The Purge Affected Red Army?

THE DESIRE to bolster domestic morale is not the only reason for the current series of border incidents. There is also an eagerness to ascertain how far Russia will go in aiding China, as a wish to test the efficiency of the post-purge Red Army.

Fear of a Soviet attack compels the Japanese general staff to keep 300,000 to 400,000 of its picked men in Manchuria. Tokyo does not know if Moscow's understanding with the Chinese government includes active military operations. It is to determine the nature of the agreement that Japan is teasing the Russian Moujik.

If the latter refuses to give ground, Japan will be obliged to maintain her huge army in Manchuria for years to come. If Moscow shows conciliation, as it did a year ago on the Amur River, the Japanese general staff will send a part of its Manchurian force to the Yangtse Valley, where they are badly needed for a drive on Hankow.

If Russia backs down in the present dispute, she will also convince the Japanese that the series of army purges which followed the execution of Marshal Tukhachevsky had seriously undermined the fighting capacity of the Soviet war machine. And in that conviction, however erroneous it may be, lies a great danger for international peace, for it might encourage Japan to embark on a new adventure on foreign soil.

Senator George

By Ernest Lindley

Something About His 'Liberal' Record.

UNTIL the President delivered his Barnesville speech, this correspondent had never heard anyone suggest that Senator George of Georgia, was a New Deal Democrat, a progressive Democrat, or a liberal Democrat. Senator George's legal ability and those gentlemanly qualities to which the President paid his respects have made him many friends. When allowances had been made for those personal attributes, it seemed reasonable to suppose that the high esteem for Senator George manifested by conservatives of both parties was due chiefly to the fact that he was one of their kind.

But since Mr. Roosevelt has said that he does not regard Senator George as a progressive or liberal Democrat, energetic efforts are being made to prove that Mr. Roosevelt is wrong by citing Senator George's voting record. It is puzzling to find organs which, on the whole, have been critical of the New Deal program urging or implying that Senator George should be re-elected because he has voted for so many New Deal bills.

* * * *

THE ATTITUDE of a Senator is not always fully revealed by his final votes on bills. It may be shown more clearly by his votes on amendments which weaken or strengthen those bills, by his votes in committee, by his public utterances and by his conversations with his colleagues. However, Senator George's voting record on the final passage of New Deal bills is sufficiently revealing.

During Mr. Roosevelt's first term, Senator George voted for nearly all the New Deal measures. There were a few important exceptions: the Guffey-Snyder coal bill, the Wagner housing bill, and, most significantly, the public utility holding company bill.

Between the 1936 election and the late spring of 1938, the main New Deal measures which were fought over in Congress were the Supreme Court bill, the wage and hour bill, the Wagner housing bill, the reorganization bill, and the farm bill. Senator George opposed every one of them except the farm bill. Admittedly the Supreme Court bill was not an accurate test either of conservatism versus liberalism or of party regularity. Drop the Supreme Court bill off the list and Senator George's record since the 1936 election is that of a man who has broken with the leadership of his party.

UNLIKE Senators Byrd, Tydings, Glass and Bailey, Senator George did not emerge as an outspoken anti-New Deal Democrat during Mr. Roosevelt's first term. His record is similar to that of another group of old-line Democrats who, on the whole, "went along" with the President for four years—perhaps merely from a sense of party loyalty, or from recognition of Mr. Roosevelt's overwhelming popularity, or because they were being fed patronage. They frequently impeded or circumscribed the scope of the reforms proposed by Mr. Roosevelt, but the substance of much of his program was enacted.

Soon after Mr. Roosevelt had been overwhelmingly re-elected, it became plain that the old-line Democrats were determined to apply the brakes to his program and to fight it out with the progressives for control of the platform and Presidential nominee in 1940. The schism in the party was clear, and the conservative Democrats made little attempt to gloss it over until Senator Pepper's easy victory in Florida indicated that Mr. Roosevelt, after all, was still the leader of the rank and file of voters.

Mr. Roosevelt's plain talk at Barnesville took courage. As a part-time resident of Georgia, he knew that Senator George is held in high respect by many Georgians. He knew that Gov. Rivers and his State machine were receiving financial aid from the same interests that were aiding Senator George. He had been informed that it looked as if Mr. Camp, the progressive Democrat candidate for Senator, would run a poor third.

* * * *

THE EASY COURSE for Mr. Roosevelt would have been to abandon Mr. Camp or to speak ambiguously. Instead, he frankly asked the Democratic voters in Georgia to recognize the basic issue in their party—whether it is to be a Progressive Democratic party carrying forward the policies of the New Deal or a reactionary party. As to Mr. Roosevelt's concept of the Democratic party, there never has been much doubt. In accepting the Presidential nomination at Chicago in 1932 he not only invited the support of progressive Republicans, but said: "Here and now, in equal measure, I warn those nominal Democrats who squint at the future with their faces turned toward the past, and who feel no responsibility to the demands of the new time, that they are out of step with their party."

In 1936, Alfred E. Smith, John W. Davis and several other leading Democrats recognized that they were "out of step with their party" and supported the Republican national ticket. The single party system in the South is a deterrent to a sound political realignment.

The President has sought to lift the Democratic primary in Georgia above personalities to a high level of principle. The voters of Georgia can support both Roosevelt and George if they prefer. All that Mr. Roosevelt asked was that they realize that between his ideas and Senator George's there is as much of a gulf as there is between his and Representative Wadsworth's or Representative Snell's.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

What's Wrong With These Pictures?

Hollywood is to spend a million dollars in a goodwill campaign to bring people back into the picture houses. This is cheap enough when you consider the many millions it has spent to drive them out.

* * * *

"Movies Are Your Best Entertainment" is the slogan and it is all right with the public, provided it doesn't include those trailers advertising coming releases.

* * * *

The movie magnates have been aroused by the fact that people have been staying away from pictures in large numbers. Radio has been one big handicap and Hollywood now fears television, hence the million-dollar drive to recapture and hold public interest in magic-lantern shows.

* * * *

There is no doubt that the movies have come to stay. But have the audiences?

* * * *

The campaign will include a question and answer contest. We didn't know there was room for another question and answer contest in this country today.

* * * *

There will be a grand prize of $50,000. To compete you have to go to a movie. It seems enough money to offer, unless the movie you have to attend is one of those three-decker things: three bad pictures for the price of one.

* * * *

But if the bill includes the traditional period of boredom induced by all those snaps from future features $50,000 will be no inducement.

* * * *

A million dollars is so much chicken feed to Hollywood but the moguls could find out what's wrong with business for much less money. Number One Driver-Outer is the trailer. It is interesting to know what pictures are coming for the rest of the week, but no fan wants to see snatches from next month's supply.

* * * *

We will bet any movie magnate that more fans are kept from the picture houses by the trailer nuisance than by any other one thing. The trailers may be better than the picture but the boys should realize that the fans come to a theater to be entertained, not exasperated.

* * * *

Another point worth mentioning, is the usher evil. It is okay for those fellows to be militant, handsome and energetic, but we still think a fan should be allowed to go in the door he likes instead of the one the usher likes.

* * *

* * * *

"Notice. If the person who took begonia from the veranda of 28 Sunnyside avenue will call in the daytime I will give them another plant just to see what such a morally depraved character looks like. He must be in a class all by himself, a degenerated specimen of the anthropoid. Charles O. Barrett."—Putnam Patriot.

* * * *

On the other hand, he may be just a fellow who wanted a begonia.

"Police arrested 20 WPA workers when their noontime crap game was raided. Nineteen went to jail in default of $2 fines."—News item.

* * * *

That twentieth fellow must have had hot dice.

* * * *

The more you look around the world today the more you get the idea that what this planet is getting is government by jittersbugs.

One of the largest drug-store chains recently placed orders for fall and winter, their outstanding purchases being of silk lamp shades, table lamps, damask pillows, rubber bath mats, cowhide brief cases, carving knives, shower curtains, thumb tacks and kitchenware. The mystery entitled "Why Do They Call It a Drugstore?" is still unsolved.

Books And Things

By Lewis Gannett.

America's Imperial Age.

MR. NICHOLAS ROOSEVELT, former Minister to Hungary and vice governor of the Philippines, now an editorial writer on the New York Herald Tribune, formulates a political philosophy differing from those of both his Presidential cousins in "A New Birth of Freedom" (Scribners, $2.50).

The moral fiber of the American people is rotting, it seems to Nicholas Roosevelt, and a cult of dependence is replacing the old passion for independence. Children are brought up with no sense of obligation; misled by "the glitter of this mechanical age," the American people has lost its sense of elemental things and looks to the radio, the movies and the automobile to stifle its boredom; morals are decaying, the "new rich" act like irresponsible buccaneers, and in high places a program of "security" and "relief" has replaced the old faith in self-reliance, initiative and personal courage. Both business and Government have grown too big; the dead hand of bureaucracy is sapping the old adventurous instincts.

Meanwhile, a system of hidden taxation and reckless borrowing has concealed the fact that in the long run the pay roll and the tax bill must be balanced. Meanwhile, the people are being trained to believe that only a strong executive can save them, to have faith in "good dictators." Augustus, he points out, lured Rome into a faith in "good dictators," and we all know the outcome.

THE NEW FAITH in "collectivism," Mr. Roosevelt holds, is essentially reactionary. It is a return to precisely those evils which the Founding Fathers most feared, against which they most carefully safeguarded their young nation. For, he believes, collectivism cannot stop halfway; once embarked upon a program of "national planning," logic forces ever-increasing limitations of the rights of individual citizens. Collectivism, he says, is essentially paternalistic; he would substitute a system of "fraternalism."

I DOUBT that the United States is in quite as bad a way as Mr. Roosevelt fears, and his logic seems to me sometimes as weak as was Herbert Spencer's, back in 1848, when the English philosopher argued against the establishment of boards of health as a violation of the rights of the individual and a fatal step toward the slave state. We have taken many steps in "collectivism" since then, and most of us feel that those steps—public schools, parks, sewage systems and increasing regulation of business, as of street traffic—have been steps away from, rather than toward, the slave state which, like Mr. Roosevelt, we fear and detest.

Yet this emphasis on the local basis of democracy is indubitably sound. Mr. Justice Brandeis has been the most cogent opponent of this "Curse of Bigness" in our national life, but his emphasis differs somewhat from Mr. Roosevelt's. Centralization in government may be recognized as an inevitable and sanitary response to centralization in business; political decentralization is hardly possible until some other check upon industrial autocracy has been discovered.

The Federal Diary

By Scott Hart

Mrs. Gertrude Evans, of Washington, has given the United Federal Workers of America $500 to establish a memorial library in memory of her daughter, Trudy Evans. Miss Evans had been active in the Washington Labor Study Group, out of which grew the U. F. W. A. Federal Workers' School. The U. F. W. A. had for some time been considering the establishment of a labor library in its headquarters and the bequest brings the project to reality.

The Public Health Service has granted optional Q. S. and L. to all employes at marine hospitals who have families and earn $1,200 and less a year. This is the culmination of an eight months' campaign by the U. F. W. A. Approximately 400 employes in 25 hospitals will be affected by the order.

The U. F. W. A. sees it as the first major step in obtaining optional Q. S. and L. for all Public Health Service workers, and thinks it will give impetus to the Dewey Johnson bill that provides universal option Q. S. and L., a minimun salary and an eight-hour day.

J. L. Acuff, chairman of the I. D. R. A. cruise committee, says there will be a capacity crowd aboard the steamship City of Washington tonight when the Interior Department organization sponsors its first boat ride. Among the group of hostesses will be:

Dorothy Bardy and Helen Halbig, of Housing; Velma Carter and Helen Cranston, of National Parks; Grace Howard and Katherine Ale, of the Indian Office; Tommy Leady, of the Information Division; Ouida Lutes, of Territories; Janaan Leonard, Dorothy Burke, Idalon Wilson, Betty Duffer and Dorothy Richardson, of PWA, and Eve Rogers and Mollie Hershkowitz, of National Parks. On the popularity contest committee are John Wilkinson, NPS; Allen Rickets, PWA; Dave Bent, USHA; Leslie Landrum, NRC; Marion Sedberry, Reclamation, and Kenfield Bailey, Territories. On the awards committee are Howard Stinson, H. A. Tolson, Taylor Chamberlin and S. M. Barrett.

Besides the "Miss Popularity" and dancing, there will be entertainment under direction of Bobby Mahoney, of the Secretary's Office. Newspapermen will be honorary judges in the popularity contest. The winner gets a wrist watch; the runner-up gets a bouquet.

The Civil Service Commission announces examination for senior consultant in public assistance, $4,600; consultant in public assistance, $3,800; associate consultant in public assistance, $3,200, and assistant consultant in public assistance, $2,600, Social Security Board and Department of Labor. Optional subjects are: Case work, social research. There are educational and experience requirements. For the senior and full grades, applicants must not have passed their fifty-third birthday; for the associate grades the top age limit is 45, and for the assistant grade, 40. The closing date is September 6.

Anne Minter has been elected vice president of the Women's Union (N. F. F. E.), Bureau of Engraving and Printing, F. E. U. No. 105. She succeeds Mignon Miller, who was elected president. Other officers are: Gertrude M. McNally, corresponding secretary; Gertrude Schellhorn, recording secretary; Margaret Garry, secretary-treasurer; Leo Williams, guide, and Minnie Stevens, guardian.

Agent 6-3 reports that the Quartermaster General's office in the Munitions Building is in a stew because of an order calling for a lot of night work. As a result, he says, many girls will be and are now reading specifications eight hours a day and also working several hours at night without overtime pay. The biggest gripe comes from civilians in the mechanical division, it was said. Where is all that talk about overtime that went on here a year ago? There was so much talk we thought something might be done, but not yet, it would seem.

Comes a card from likable Henry D. Billings, of Interior. He is in the Southwest United States, en route to Carlsbad Caverns.

And from the West, we heard that college students, school teachers and professional resort employes from 40 States, the District of Columbia and Hawaii are engaged in waiting on tables, making beds and carrying luggage in Yellowstone National Park.

Terming themselves "savages," these park employes, many of them fraternity and sorority members from large universities, earn spending money during the summer in one of nature's loveliest spots. The park operators say that thousands of applications from all parts of the country start to flood their offices early in winter when word gets out that approximately 2,500 positions are available in the park.

Buenos Aires, Aug. 14 (AP).—The Newspaper La Prensa today urged revision of the 1916 treaty between the United States and Nicaragua granting perpetual rights for construction of an Atlantic to Pacific canal across Nicaragua.

The newspaper declared the treaty should be modified in the interests of good will before the Pan-American Conference meets at Lima next December.

Ratified in 1916, the Chamorro-Bryan treaty gave the United States the right to build a canal, a naval base on the Pacific, and the use of Great and Little Corn Islands in the Caribbean.

The newspaper asserted revision should be the next step since the United States already has given up her right to intervene in Cuba and revised her treaty relations with Panama as part of her good neighbor policy.

DoctorHears Heart Of Man as It Stops

Pittsburgh, Aug. 14 (AP).—Dr. Richard O. Snyder heard through his stethoscope the heart attack from which Clarence A. Zimmer died. Dr. Snyder, called yesterday to treat Zimmer, who had complained of chest pains, described the sudden end:

"The heart was beating normally, then it quit all of a sudden."

Sen. Thomas Apparently Is Unopposed in Utah

Salt Lake City, Aug. 13 (AP).—Senator Thomas entered Utah's primary race without Democratic opposition tonight as the deadline for filing petitions of nomination for the September 13 ballot passed. However, petitions bearing postmarks up to midnight Saturday will be received.

Contenders for the Republican senatorial nomination will be Dr. Arthur C. Wherry and Attorney Claude T. Barnes, of Salt Lake City, and Dr. Franklin S. Harris, of Provo, president of Brigham Young University.

Warsaw, Aug. 14 (AP).—Pro-government youth organizations paraded today in celebration of the eighteenth anniversary of Poland's victory over a Bolshevist army at the gates of Warsaw, a day in advance of the actual anniversary.

More than a hundred persons were killed on that date a year ago during a bloody rioting after peasants, who claim the 1920 victory was due to their heroic sacrifices, expressed their disapproval of government policies by a strike.

Capital Colonists Hear Iturbi at Bar Harbor

While those left behind in Washington swelter, members of society who are vacationing in cool Bar Harbor, Me., divide their time between al fresco concerts, golf tourneys, and the usual dinners and teas which play a large part in the life of this fashionable resort.

The Washington contingent summering there was represented almost one hundred per cent at the concert given on Saturday evening by Jose Iturbi at the Building of Arts. Among those present Mrs. Mrs. Peter Augustus Jay, Maj. and Mrs. Gist Blair, prominent "cave dwellers;" Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Langhorne; the former Ambassador to Belgium and Mrs. Dave Hennen Morris; Mrs. Henry F. Dimock, Prince and Princess Burhaneddin, Constantine Brun, honorary Counselor of the Danish Legation and formerly a leading figure in society here; Mrs. Stanley Marshall Rinehart, famous writer of mystery and other stories; Mr. and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, parents of the Secretary of the Treasury, and Mrs. Nathan C. Wyeth.

Others present included Mrs. Frank Cookman, of Washington and Baltimore; Dr. Frederick Jack, Mr. and Mrs. John Saltonstall, Mrs. Edward Robinette, Mr. and Mrs. George Randall, Mrs. James Royce, Dr. and Mrs. Walter Damrosch, Dr. Augustus Thorndike, Mrs. Edward Bok and Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert H. Montague.

Gilbert de Sibours Arrive for Visit

Mr. and Mrs. Jean de Sibour have joined the Bar Harbor colony and are guests of Miss Helen S. Jones, at Foxwood. Mrs. de Sibour, the former Valerie Prochnik, is the daughter of the Minister Attache of the German Embassy and Frau Prochnik.

Other recent arrivals among the younger married set are Mr. and Mrs. John F. Sweeney, who are guests of the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bell Sweeney, at Petunia Cottage. They plan to stay several weeks.

Maj. and Mrs. Gist Blair have with them L. R. Marshall, of New York.

Mrs. Wyeth, Mrs. Blaine Beale and Thomas Bell Sweeney were among the Washington guests of Mrs. Walter Damrosch, wife of the noted composer and dramatist, when she entertained at a luncheon recently in honor of Mrs. Lewis O. Barrows, wife of the Governor of Maine. Others in the company were Mrs. Clarence Cook Little, Mrs. John Hampton Barnes, Mrs. Edgar Scott, Mrs. Chauncey McCormick, Mrs. Sheppard Fabbri, Mrs. Reginald de Koven, Mrs. Sidney Howard and Miss Gertrude Sampson.

Mrs. Rinehart To Be Feted

Mrs. Rinehart will be guest of honor at a luncheon to be given today by Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Marburg at Bide-a-While. Their guests will include Mr. and Mrs. Morgenthau, Mrs. John T. Dorrance, of Philadelphia; Mrs. George Huntington Williams, of Washington and Baltimore; Charles Louis Marburg, Dr. Frederick Jack, and Arthur N. Coles. Until recent years, when she moved to New York, Mrs. Rinehart made her home in Washington.

Baron Mario Bucovich, who spent part of last winter here, has joined the Bar Harbor colony and was among the guests at a buffet supper given last week at the Bar Harbor Club by Mr. and Mrs. Henry O. Tallmadge, of New York. Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin, of Washington, has joined Mrs. Henry F. Dimock, of Elsinore.

Villa Bahar, the residence of Prince and Princess Burhaneddin, was the scene of a piano recital given last Friday evening by Paul Doguereau, well-known musician. His program included works by Beethoven, Chopin, Schumann and Lizt.

Members of the summer colonies on Mount Desert Island took part in the Kebo Valley putting tournament which was held there last week. The affair set a record as the largest of its kind in the history of the club, with more than 125 entries listed. Those taking part included Dr. Jack, Maj. McMurtry, Harry G. Haskell, Mr. and Mrs. John Sweeney, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bell Sweeney, jr., Winchester Noyes and many others of the Washington colony.

The second mixed foursomes tourney of the Kebo Valley Golf Club, with prizes awarded to winner and runner-up groups, was held on Friday over the 18-hole layout. The tournament committee promoting the weekly event consists of Mrs. Wyeth, Miss Margaret Steward, of Philadelphia, and Mrs. H. Howard Ellison, of Philadelphia, and Mrs. Alfred H. Geary.

Maj. and Mrs. George G. McMurtry entertained at a luncheon at the Kebo Valley Golf Club preceding the weekly tombstone tournament. Guests included Mrs. Wyeth, Mrs. Warren H. Buckler, Mrs. Selden Chapin, of the Washington colony, and Mr. and Mrs. S. Hayward Gillespie, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Stevenson, Mr. and Mrs. Phillips Ketchum, Mr. and Mrs. C. Ross Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Jay Cooke, Mr. and Mrs. John J. O'Brien Mrs. Tristram C. Colket, Mrs. George A. Munson, Mrs. Barclay Ulman and Mrs. Crawford C. Madeira.

Mrs. Wright Off To Mrs. Leiter's

Mrs. Joseph Leiter, of Washington, who is summering at her estate in Beverly Farms, on the North Shore of Massachusetts, will have as her guest there this week Mrs. Jerauld Wright, the former Miss Phyllis Thompson. Mrs. Wright, who is the wife of Commander Wright, U. S. N., spent the week-end at her former home at 3226 N street and will fly to Boston this morning.

Thursday Mrs. Wright will go to Southampton, Long Island, to attend the wedding there on Friday of Miss Beatrice Patterson, Philadelphia belle, to Rodman Wanamaker, jr. The ceremony will be a small and simple one. Mrs. Wright will be the guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Phillips B. Thompson, of Southampton, until returning to the Capital a week from Wednesday. She will be here until joining Commander Wright on the West Coast about the middle of September.

Gen. and Mrs. William Mason Wright, parents of Commander Wright, expect to spend part of next winter in California. They are at present visiting their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. David McK. Key, in Ottawa, where Mr. Key is second secretary of the United States Legation.

Mrs. Jerauld Wright and Miss Betty Hardie, with whom she maintained an appartment here, will give it up September 1 and reside at Gen. and Mrs. Wright's residence, 3028 Q street, for a brief time. Miss Hardie has as her guest at present her mother, Mrs. Louis Hardie of New Orlenas.

V. F. W. Women Plan Jubilee

One hundred thousand members of the Ladies Auxiliary to the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States will inaugurate their twenty-fifth anniversary year on Thursday, August 25. The auxiliary, which was organized in 1914 to promote the welfare of veterans who had fought in overseas wars, has made plans for a full year's observance of its silver jubilee.

The annual national encampment will be held simultaneously with that of the Veterans of Foreign Wars in Columbus, Ohio, next week. August 25 has been set aside as "Silver Jubilee Day." A colorful military ball will be staged as an inaugural to the anniversary year.

The ladies auxiliary was founded in Pittsburgh, Pa., with representatives from less than a dozen of Veterans of Foreign Wars posts. Today, its membership of 100,000 is divided among 2,500 auxiliaries in every state of the union and the Territories. Membership in the auxiliary is limited to mothers, wives, sisters and daughters of American soldiers who have fought on foreign soil in defense of their country.

As a special feature of the silver jubilee year, the auxiliary is conducting a national mobilization of its membership. Twenty-five hundred scrolls of honor, one to each auxiliary, have been distributed for the signature of each individual member. Each scroll bears a pledge of faith in the organization and its program of Americanism.

These scroll sheets will be compiled into a gigantic scroll of honor. The scroll will be presented at dedication services of a national shrine to be established in Pittsburgh, the birthplace of the auxiliary, in the spring of 1939.

Miss Middleton Becomes Bride

Two people of imposing lineage were united in marriage Saturday afternoon at Williamstown, Mass., when Miss Ellida Juell Middleton, daughter of the late Arthur E. H. Middleton, of Washington, became the bride of Edward Everett Hawks, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Hawks, of North Adams, Mass.

The Rev. Ralph Putney, of Lenox, Mass., performed the ceremony, which took place at St. John's Church.

Mr. Hawks is a lineal descendant of Sergt. John Hawks, who commanded Fort Massachusetts when that fort, established by Col. Ephraim Williams, who later founded Williams College, was attacked by French and Indians in 1746. Mr. Hawks' ancestry also includes several heroes of the American Revolution.

Miss Nancy Reeves Middleton served as her sister's maid of honor and the bride's other attendants were Mrs. Malcolm Webster Ford, of Roslyn, Long Island, and Miss Evelyn Welch and Mrs. R. Brewster Barry, of Williamstown. Robert C. Gray, of Westfield, Mass., was best man, and ushers were Webster S. Temple, of Bennington, Vt., and Carl L. Blair and H. Brewster Barry, of Williamstown.

After a wedding trip to Lake Champlain and Toronto, the couple will reside at North Adams. Mrs. Hawks is a graduate of Maryland College for Women.

Sally Clark's Betrothal Is At Last Confirmed

Night Club Singer, Sister-in-Law of John Roosevelt, to Wed in January.

The oft-rumored engagement of Miss Sally Clark, daughter of Mrs. F. Haven Clark, and sister-in-law of John Roosevelt, to George Xavier McLanahan, of New York and Watch Hill, R. I., was confirmed yesterday by Mrs. Clark at her summer home at Nahant, Mass., where her elder daughter, Anne, was married to the youngest son of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt last June 18.

The wedding of Sally, who likes to sing in night clubs and peroxide strands of her dark hair, will not take place until she has terminated an engagement at the Persian Room of the Plaza, according to her mother, who has announced January 6 as the date of the marriage. The ceremony will take place at Emmanuel Church in Boston, where Mrs. Clark has a winter home.

Mr. McLanahan, a social registerite, was graduated from Yale last year. He and Miss Clark have been seen often in each other's company at New York night spots. The latter was maid of honor at her sister's marriage to John Roosevelt.

Women Voters Plan Campaign

A Nation-wide effort to get important questions of American foreign policy into the political picture in the coming Congressional elections was launched today by Mrs. Louise Leonard Wright, chairman of the department of government and foreign policy of the National League of Women Voters.

Mrs. Wright, author of "Toward a Collective Peace System," and wife of Quincy Wright, member of the faculty of the University of Chicago, spent several days at league members use their influning an active league campaign to get Congressional candidates to express their opinions on matters of foreign policy so that voters may consider that in casting their November ballots.

In the message Mrs. Wright is sending out to State chairmen of her department, entitled "Casting a Vote on Foreign Policy," she pointed out:

"As political and economic questions are more and more acquiring international aspects, the debate in Congress is increasingly concerned with foreign policy. Questions which were originally considered purely domestic, such as tariff, immigration, neutrality, are now complicated by international implications."

She urged that during the campaign records of candidates who have been in office be examined as to their votes on such questions; that opinions of candidates be gathered from press stories and campaign speeches, and that league members use their influence to see that the candidate expresses himself on foreign affairs. On the last point, however, she pointed out:

"Many candidates have had no opportunity to become conversant on issues of foreign affairs, consequently their views will not be as significant as their receptivity to new ideas and information."

Mrs. Wright explained that the campaign was not to put candidates "on the spot" in any sense, but to call their attention to the increasing interest in international affairs in this country and their increasing importance to this country.

She advanced the thought that American people are even more interested in international affairs than they themselves realize, using the war debts as an example.

"We are accustomed to thinking of the war debts as an old and tiresome subject," she said, "but as a matter of fact there is not a debate on foreign policy in the House of Representatives in which the war debts are not mentioned.

They are ever present in the minds of Congress, an obstacle to negotiations on every other subject. The league is for reconsideration and revision of the war debts in order to clear the way for progress."

Neutrality and trade agreements are the two principal foreign policy points of immediate interest to the league.

Arthur C. Smiths Hosts At Fairfax County Club

Eleanor Sayre Joins Parents

Having completed several weeks of hard work at study and holding a job at the same time, Miss Eleanor Sayre, daughter of the Assistant Secretary of State, Francis B. Sayre, has joined her father and stepmother at their summer home on Martha's Vineyard. She will remain with them until Mr. and Mrs. Sayre return to Washington in late September.

Miss Sayre, who was graduated in June from Bryn Mawr, is greatly interested in museum work and majored in art at college. This summer she took a course in primitive art at the Fogg Museum, in Cambridge, Mass., and also helped catalogue exhibits for the print room. She plans to study for a degree in museum work this winter at Harvard.

Mrs. Sayre, an artist of ability, was too busy with official duties this past year to find much time for painting, but has found the leisure to take it up again on the Vineyard. Her mother, Mrs. Vernon Evans, has been her guest there for several weeks.

Francis Sayre, son of Mr. Sayre, is working in Cincinnati this summer, and Woodrow Wilson Sayre, another son, is traveling through Europe before returning to his studies at Williams College.

Col. Magruder Takes House

400 Guests at Hutchison's Laurel Park Housewarming

Choosing a perfect afternoon, with the weather made to order and the setting sun tinting the varied green of their 374-acre estate with soft golden light, Mr. and Mrs. Richard H. Hutchison, were at home yesterday afternoon to about 400 of their friends from 5:30 to 8 o'clock, at Laurel Park Farms, Md.

The lovely old estate, with its outdoor, mile-long, private race track, and its stable surrounded by an indoor, glassed-in race track, its old colonial brick house and surrounding guest houses and gardens, has been undergoing a great deal of renovation since the Hutchisons purchased it last November. The party yesterday, the first large one they have given, was in the nature of a housewarming.

Mr. and Mrs. Hutchison were assisted in receiving by their son, Richard H. Hutchison, jr., and their daughter, Miss Betty Lloyd Hutchison.

Blue Dominates Decorative Motif

The drawing room of the house has been exquisitely done. The walls of Williamsburg blue, the furniture upholstered in a deeper blue and soft flowered drapes at the long windows and French doors add to its attractive quality.

Miss Betty Lloyd Hutchison, following the blue scheme, chose a frock of a lighter shade, a pastel sky blue. A formal tea gown of floor length, it was made with an underfrock of blue satin. Over this was a chiffon princess gown of the same tone, girdled at the waistline with satin, fully accordion pleated in the skirt, and flaring apart in front to show the satin under-gown. The accessories matched the gown.

Owners to Raise Horses

Laurel Park Farm, a show place in this part of the country, whose white gleaming fences can be seen from the Baltimore pike, could well produce great dividends for its owners, but Mr. and Mrs. Hutchison purchased it only for a summer home, and intend to use it as such. As they are all tremendously interested in horses and in riding, they plan to develop the paddocks and may show in some of the fall events. They make their winter home at 3201 Garfield street, Washington.

Among the guests yesterday were Judge and Mrs. F. Dickinson Letts, Mr. and Mrs. Elwood H. Seal, Miss Margaret Sampson, William K. Wimsatt, Vernon West, Mrs. William Miller, Allen Turner, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Lean and Mrs. George Elliott.

At the other end, presiding over the punchbowl, was Mrs. Allen Krebs, gowned in a picture model of white mousseline de soie, with an applique design of leaves and flowers in white taffeta. In her dark hair she wore a fresh white gardenia.

Also assisting was Miss Mary Parker, wearing an ashes of roses pink frock with Copenhagen blue accessories. Mr. and Mrs. William Schulz were among the guests, Mrs. Schultz in an afternoon tea gown of glowing mousseline de soie, cloud gray, with a bodice of lace of the same color. With this she wore a picture hat of pale rose and accessories to match.

Daughter Born Aug. 6 To the Henry Howards

News has been received of the birth of a daughter August 6 in London to Mr. and Mrs. Henry Howard.

Mrs. Howard is the former Miss Adele Alsop, of New York and Lenox, Mass. Mr. Howard is the son of Sir Esme Howard, Baron Penrith, who served as British Ambassador here. Their marriage took place last summer in the Berkshires.

Davies Visits London.

Joseph E. Davies, United States Ambassador to Belgium, is at Claridge's in London after a visit to Wales, where he spoke at the Cardiff Eisteddfod.

Robinsons Plan Arlington Home

Mr. and Mrs. George Wendell Robinson, jr., who were married Saturday afternoon, will make their home in Arlington County after a brief wedding trip.

The bride is the former Miss Alice Rebecca Elgin, daughter of Mrs. Charles Walter Elgin, of Arlington, and the late Mr. Elgin, and Mr. Robinson is the son of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Robinson, also of that place.

Their wedding took place at the home of the bride's mother, the Rev. G. G. Oliver, of the Clarendon Methodist Episcopal Church, officiating. Mrs. Will Taylor, grandmother of the bridegroom, played the wedding marches.

The couple exchanged their vows before an improvised altar in the living room, which was decorated with white gladioli, ferns and garden flowers. The bride, whose mother gave her in marriage, wore a white satin gown with a heart shaped neckline and short puffed sleeves. Her brief veil fell from a cap of net and lace and she carried white roses. Her maid of honor and only attendant, Miss Joyce Stead, of Decatur, Ga., wore a gown of aqua made like that of the bride and carried tea roses. Ernest R. Wilson, of Arlington, was best man.

Miss Blauvelt Becomes Bride

Of interest to Washington was the marriage in Franklin Lakes, N. J., Saturday of Miss Elizabeth Anne Blauvelt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Elvin Blauvelt, of Paterson, N. J., to Andrew William Patten, son of Mrs. Andrew W. Patten, of Carbondale, Pa. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Howard A. Adair, pastor of the Eastside Presbyterian Church, Paterson.

The bride, who is a graduate of the National Cathedral School here, was given in marriage by her father. Her matron of honor was Mrs. John M. Cramer, of Carbondale, and Miss Clarissa Boyd, of Paterson, was maid of honor. Roswell S. McMullen, of Carbondale, was best man.

Mr. and Mrs. Patten will live in Carbondale after a tour of the New England States.

Washington Teacher Touring New Zealand

Miss Kathryn Everett, teacher of mathematics in Taft Junior High School and a member of the Parent-Teacher Association there, is spending the summer in travel. She is now in New Zealand and, on her way home, will stop for a week in the Hawaiian Islands. She expects to arrive home the day before the opening of the school term.

Miss Everett sailed from San Francisco the middle of last month after a motor trip to that city with her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. B. Wood. Mrs. Wood is a teacher in the kindergarten of Ketcham School. She and her husband have returned from the coast, having stopped in Yellowstone and Glacier National Park en route.

Announce March Marriage.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Granville Myers, of Chevy-Chase, Md., announce the marriage last March 18 of their daughter, June Allison, to Robert Pearson arland, son of Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Garland, of this city. The ceremony took place at the rectory of St. James' Episcopal Church, Leesburg, Va., th Rev. G. Peyton Craighill officiating.

Don't Worry, Eat Lightly, For Sleep

Theory That Best Rest Comes Early Is Exploded.

By Ida Jean Kain.

THERE ISN'T a word of truth in the old sayings that you must get your beauty sleep before midnight, or that one hour of sleep before midnight is worth two hours afterward. It's all sleep if you can get enough of it, but the chances are that you are an insomniac of one kind or another.

Insomnia comes in three different brands—trouble getting to sleep, fitful sleeping or dysomnia, and waking up hours before it is time to get up. With sleeping drugs being sold like apples it would seem that most of the people in this jittery world are, for one reason or another, plagued with sleeplessness. Suffice it to say that this is not an article on sedatives. If you are to keep well, you must lick your insomnia through more hygienic methods.

You May Worry Too Much.

Insomnia is not a disease, it's a symptom—not that you are losing your mind, or that you are in danger of a nervous breakdown, but probably that you worry too much, have indigestion or take insufficient exercise.

You cannot switch off your thoughts with the lights, and if you add to your other worries the fear of being unable to sleep, you can count on having insomnia. More than 60 per cent of insomnia is said to be caused by the fear of it, and the fear that because of it the night's rest will be inadequate. Now, nobody knows how much sleep we need, anyway, and lying down at complete rest is considered almost as good as sleeping.

If you could only sell yourself the idea that you are getting adequate rest and that it really did not matter whether or not you went to sleep on time, you would eliminate the worst result of insomnia, which is worry. Moreover, you would probably find yourself dropping off to sleep with little ado about it!

Indigestion One Cause.

Waking up during the night is usually caused by indigestion. If you are a fitful sleeper, it would be a good idea either to have a light evening meal or to have your evening meal much earlier. Coffee and other stimulants do keep some people awake, but, as one doctor has pointed out, much of the sleeplessness laid to the after-dinner coffee might well be laid to the heavy dinner which preceded it.

Once you stop worrying, exercise is almost a cure-all, for it does two very important things: improves the digestion, and it is conducive to complete relaxation. The best exercises are, of course, those which you enjoy and which wear you out physically, such as golf, tennis and swimming. But not all of us are free to indulge in our favorite recreations, and walking, just plain walking, will cure your insomnia—if you take it in large doses. Wait for an hour after dinner, and then start in and walk for two hours. Do that every evening, and you will sleep!

Make up your mind to stop worrying and to go to work on the cause, and you can lick your insomnia.

The GENTLER SEX

By Malvina Lindsay.

Summer Visitor.

"Now we can just sleep anywhere, Grace; we don't want to be treated like company . . . We'd have gone to a hotel, but I knew we'd all want to be together as much as possible while we were here . . . and then Arthur got so sick of hotels on the way in. That's the trouble with driving—you can't get any decent food.

"I bet you were plenty surprised when you saw us driving up, weren't you? . . . Arthur wanted to telegraph, but I said, 'I'm not going to do it; if I do, Grace'll go to a lot of trouble. We'll just drop in and take pot luck. Junior, get away from those goldfish!'

"Yes, we've been driving since 5 o'clock this morning. We covered 525 miles—what was that, Arthur? . . . 527? . . . well, all right, and we're simply sights. I can hardly wait to get into a bathtub. Hush, Junior!'

"Oh, he doesn't want anything . . . No, be still . . . No you don't, either . . . Well, go out to the car and get that bag of cookies. No, Grace, don't bother to get him anything now. He can just wait till dinner.

• • • •

"Well, it's certainly nice to see Washington, but I never thought it would be this hot. I don't see how you stand it—all this humidity. Now, the heat at home is dry. Junior, get away from that piano with your dirty hands!

"I guess this isn't the best time of year to come, but we thought as we were driving on to New York anyway, we might as well come by Washington. As I told Arthur, 'Grace'll never forgive us if she hears we've been East and passed her up.

"Then, of course, I thought it would be a good chance to show Junior all the Government buildings and Mount Vernon and the White House. Especially while you were living here. You always get so much more out of those things if somebody takes you around.

"Say Grace is there any chance of us getting in to see Mrs. Roosevelt? The last thing everybody at home said when we left was, 'now whatever you do, you go to see Mrs. Roosevelt and tell us if she really looks like her pictures.' Well I knew if there was anybody who could get us in to see Mrs. Roosevelt you'd be the one—you've been here so long.

• • • •

"What Junior? . . . He wants to know if we'll see the place where they make the money? . . . Oh yes, and we want to go out to this Greenbelt place and Arlington Cemetery and all through the Agriculture building . . . well we just want to see everything.

"What Junior? . . . No not yet . . . Oh he just wants to know if he can bring Bounce in . . . Bounce is his rabbit. He just wouldn't leave Bounce behind and he raised so much rampus that we just put a box in the back of the car . . . well all right, but get Daddy to help you . . . Just put him in the kitchen Grace, or any place.

"I just don't see how you ever drive in this Washington traffic. I never saw anything like it. Now at home— Junior! Don't bring Bounce in here! . . . Oh don't worry, Grace. He'll find some place to put him . . . What was that, Grace? . . . Yes I would like a drink—but don't go to any trouble . . . Thank you. My, it seems nice to be in a house again!

• • • •

"The trip was really hard on Arthur—he's got such a delicate stomach. He can't eat meat . . . and all his vegetables have to be put through a sieve—Junior! Will you please be still? . . . What? No don't bother, Grace. He just wants to feed Bounce . . . What? . . . Oh he'll eat anything. Don't go to any trouble.

"Say Grace I guess you eat a lot of sea food dont you? . . . You know I said 'That's one thing I'm going to have when I get to Washington.' I'm crazy about clams.

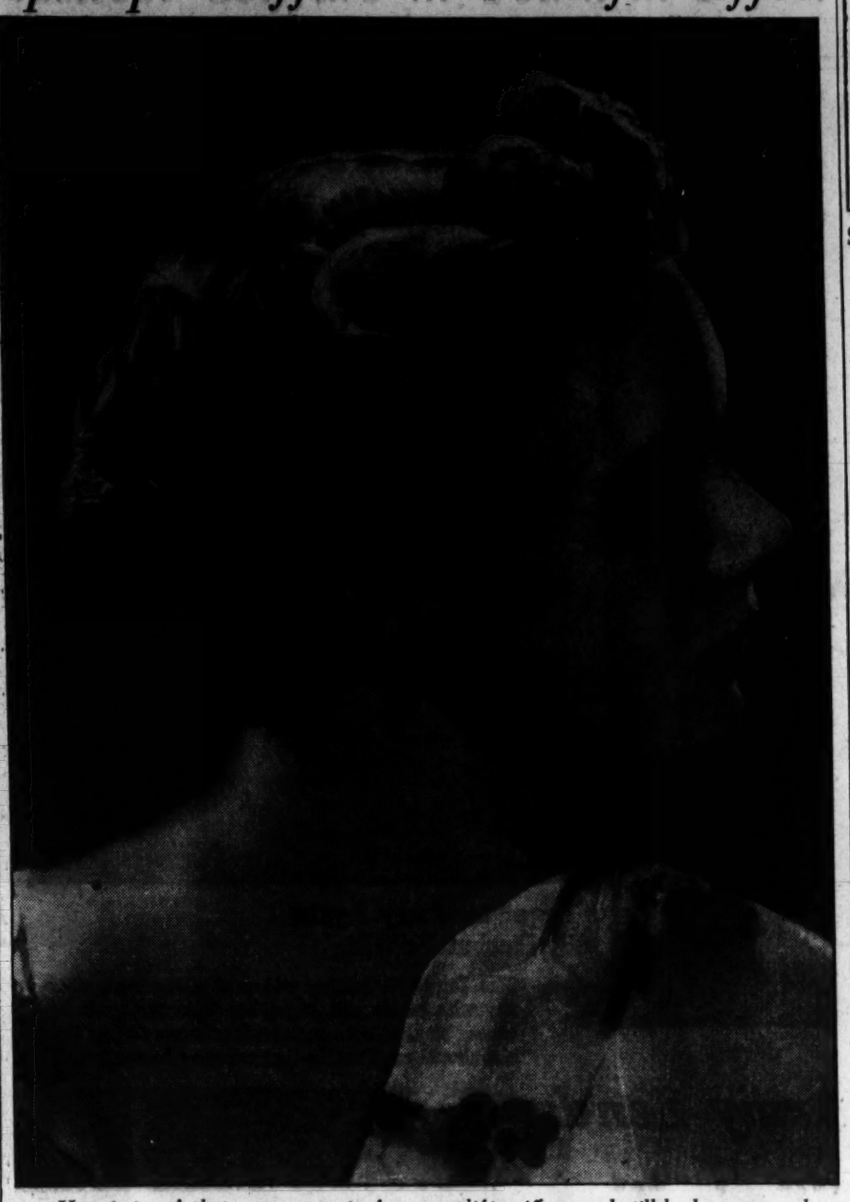
"Junior! Come in here now and sit down! . . . What? . . . Oh in a little while . . . No, you can wait . . . Don't get him anything more, Grace. He can wait until dinner.

"Say, Grace, where are you? . . . You aren't starting dinner are you? . . . Well say now don't go to any trouble. We'll just eat anything you've got in the house—Junior! Junior! Get Bounce quick! He's eating the begonia"

Salmon and Peppers Combined in Salad

Sprinkle 2 tablespoons of granulated gelatin on ½ cup of cold water. Add 1 cut of boiling water and stir until dissolved. Cool. Combine 1 cup of mayonnaise, 1 can of flaked salmon, 1 medium green pepper diced, ½ cup of chopped celery, 3 tablespoons of lemon juice, 2 cups of cooked potatoes, 1 teaspoon of salt, 1 tablespoon of minced onion. Fold into this mixture ½ cup of whipped cream. Add the cooled gelatin and turn into a pan which has been rinsed with cold water. When firm turn onto a platter with lettuce.

Upswept Coiffure in Youthful Effect



Here is proof that you can go in for an uplift coiffure and still look young and naive. Poised by Marie Wilson, movie actress.

PERKY DOLL hats or unswept or tilted-down brims in all the new fall models leave the hair exposed at one point or another. And to wear these diminutive hats the hair must follow some adaptation of the brushed-up coiffure.

The new way of doing the hair is simple. Once trained it is easily kept. It is brushed up straight and smooth off the neck, massed in clusters of curls on the top or swirled into rolls and curls at various angles. Or it may be drawn up from the ears and loosened over the front of the head and forehead and arranged in easy waves or loose curls. Your new hair-do need not be extreme, for it can be modified and adapted to your individual features.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Aug. 14.

NEVER IN the history of the Port of New York—and that goes back a fur piece—has the stowaway problem been so large and messy as it is this summer.

ALICE HUGHES

Skippers fear that ocean hitch-hikers will soon outnumber the paying guests if this keeps up. Stowing away seldom furnishes movie melodrama any more, like hiding in lifeboats or ventilators, for that guileful art has become too, too simple.

The hopeful free-riders go aboard like ordinary visitors to the big ships, paying their dimes for seamen's relief, and then mingle with the mob. They only duck out when the whistle blows "all ashore," and often appear when the lugger has slipped through the narrows and pipe "Yoo-hoo, I'm a stowaway!" The skipper is not amused. He puts them in poor cabins right over the propeller, and gives them enough grub to keep them alive—but definitely no caviar or pressed duck. Held in custody overseas, they are shipped home on the next craft, neither sadder nor wiser.

Onl the other day the noble old Aquitania brought in five of these thumb-artists, three of them young girls, Nancy Ciano, of Granston, R. I.; Dorothy Newman, of Pittsburgh, and Marjorie Robinson, of Stillwell, Okla. They spent a night in an English hoosegow, but the two men in the same passel did a month at hard labor before getting shipped home. Of course, the worst dockside headache is Master Bobbie Stap, 13, the lad with the itching feet. At present he is an uninvited guest on the Santa Elena for a 12-day Caribbean cruise, and it is his fourth such jaunt in five months. He has done European sneaks on the Georgic and the Ile de France, and a coast-wise trip to Savannah. His parents don't seem able to do much about this seagoing nuisance. What he needs is a good dose of pa's razor-strop, probably, or else a bellboy job on a ship. No doubt born for the sea.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Never let it be said that a Rockefeller isn't sentimental. When they tore down the 80-year-old home of the late John D., last month, most of the bricks were saved. I learn that his grandaughter, Abby, now Mrs. David Milton, is going to use them in constructing her new house on the family's Pocantico Hills estate. Or is it thrift?

Gertrude Lawrence has just done a nice bit of publicity for herself and our world's fair by taking a scroll and a couple of plants to Mayor Rossi, of San Francisco, where she is opening her long tour in "Susan and God." But what tickled me was the fact that our Mayor LaGuardia wrote a little note in Italian to his Western paesano, Signor Rossi. Give a bit to know what it said. Probably something like this—"Gertie is a great kid. Give her a great big hand and key to the Golden Gate!"

As this is tapped, Saratoga is moaning faintly because the no-gambling lid is still clamped down tight. Looks as though if this law-breaking isn't permitted by the rural gendarmes, the Spa will be badly lamed. But the horses run, and the old folks rock on the porches, and the pretty kids hold hands under the big night club tables. Among the twosomes are Addie Moffett, the socialass singing there, and Eddie Reeves, chain store scion, and Gloria "Mimi" Baker, last year's glam babe, and Bob Topping. This last pairing seems serious—to them, I suppose.

I hear that Gloria Swanson has rented an office in Rockefeller Center. I don't know what the business is that requires a desk and a buzzer.

Among the first shows of '38 will be "You Never Know," Cole Porter's musical which toured last spring. Lupe the Whoopee Velez and Clifton Webb will be in, but Moanin' Low Libby Holman has quit it cold. Ah, well, the Cincinnati girl has a lot of tobacco dough and a cute little son. What does she want to be torch-singing for, anyway?

The great State of California keeps nudging in as a style center. First it was outstanding sports clothes for men and girls. Now it is furniture. There's been a swell exhibit of far-west house things here—notable for its handsome natural woods, without veneer, and its lavish use of rawhide leather, some of which covers the entire top of a coffee table. Good honest native North American furniture, with none of these aly European tricks. Very nice indeedy.

Daisies Proving Success For Print Frock Design

Paris (U.P.)—Daisies for the print design are a sure-fire success. Vera Borea exploits a black silk crepe printed with dainty yellow and white daisies. The dress has godets sun-ray pleated and an inset girdle-belt of black satin. This combination of black satin with flowered crepe is repeated in a delightfully dressy tailored print suit whose flowered silk jacket has revers of black satin which extend to the waistline where they overlap and fasten with satin-covered buttons.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Southern Girl, 28, Has Smile That Stops Strange Men in Street; Her Fiance Worries, Asks Advice.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I would like your opinion on this case. About two years ago I met a very nice little girl who had come to Washington from a small Southern town. I began making dates with her—rather infrequently at first, but as time went on, we were seeing each other almost every night. Now we are engaged to be married, with the date set for this fall. We are as much in love with each other as any couple could be. I would not do anything to displease her nor do I think she would intentionally do anything to displease me . . . I am 34 and she is 28.

• • • •

She is very friendly with everyone, has a charming personality and is popular wherever she goes. But here is the rub. Sometimes I think she is too friendly, because when boys (or perhaps I should say men) around the city see her beaming face and smile they sometimes speak to her. She thinks they are just being nice and friendly and returns the salute. This leads the man, sometimes, to construe it as a come-on sign, so that he enters into conversation with her, walks along the street with her, offers to drive her home, invites her to have a cocktail with him, or something of that sort.

• • • •

Such incidents have happened several times when she was on her way home from work on the bus. For instance, the bus suddenly starting threw her against a young fellow who took this opportunity to start a conversation and when her stop was reached, he got off and walked along with her. She didn't know what to do, but figured so long as it was daylight it was all right to allow him to walk to her door, and when the house was reached she turned and started in, but he said: "Wait a minute. How about fixing up a date?" She laughed at him, told him she had a steady boy friend and went on in the house.

• • • •

Another time she was walking along a downtown street and dropped her umbrella. A man who appeared to be much younger than she gallantly picked it up and handed it to her. She smiled with that sweet smile she has and thanked him. Well, he fell in step with her and crossed the street with her, but she thought nothing of it as he was so much younger than she. Then he wanted her telephone number and address, and when she gave him the same reply she had given the man on the bus, he continued to walk with her and told her a lot about needing a change and about not going with one man all the time because by so doing she would not get the opportunity to look the others over.

• • • •

But to top them all, one night she was having dinner in a downtown cafeteria and some old man, around 60 years of age, brought his food to her table and asked if he might sit there, and of course she said "Yes." They sat there and he started a conversation in the old friendly way. When she was through, he saw to it that he finished also, and asked to take her to a show. She said "No" that she had to get on home. He asked why she had to run home and begged her to go to the show with him. She told him about her boy friend and he laughed that off and handed her a good line. She left him and went on home, nevertheless.

• • • •

One evening just before dusk, not so long ago, a delivery wagon passed her house while I was there, and she waved to the driver and said, "Hello." I asked who her friend was and she said: "He is the man who comes here for clothes, etc., for the cleaners." I told her that she should not be so friendly with anyone who serves a household like that; that if she met him on the street it would be sufficient courtesy to give him a smile and pass on; but that a wave from the porch was a little too friendly.

• • • •

I know that she does not intend to flirt; that she doesn't think she is overdoing, and I do not want to nag, nor do I think I am jealous. She does not get the least bit angry when I talk to her about these little things but says that she needs me to tell her when she does things that are unbecoming to the sweet, refined girl that she is . . . Knowing how men are, and how they talk, I want to break her of being friendly at the wrong time . . . I have all the faith in the world in her . . . so should I continue to point out these little incidents when they happen, or should I just leave her alone to work them out for herself?

WONDERING.

Regional-Type Coquette.

DEAR WONDERING: It is my belief that your financee is not an altogether artless innocent of the Little Red Riding Hood variety. She is, rather, a coquette of the village belle type. Turn to the dictionary for a definition of "coquette" and you will find a neat interpretation of her conduct and its objective—to wit: "a woman who seeks to attract men's admiration or affection for mere self-gratification, as to gratify vanity; a flirt."

• • • •

Any really intelligent girl, no matter how sincerely ingenuous to begin with, who discovered—and was discomfited by the discovery that her "beaming face and smile" and inclination toward garrulous amiability, were provocative of familiar overtures from chance-met strange men, would immediately and instinctively revise her social conduct to the extent of wearing a more self-protective mask in public.

• • • •

The fact that your fiance encourages her pick-up acquaintances to the point that each and every one of them suggests a "date" is pretty conclusive evidence that she not only isn't dismayed by their initial advances, but that she is playing a vanity-inspired game which has just such a proposal as its objective. ("Vanity," by the way, is defined as "an empty pride in one's personal appearance . . . esp., with excessive desire for notice or approval . . ").

• • • •

I am convinced that your girl friend's ego gets a great lift out of these encounters and that she savors that ego-gratification all over again in narrating these little adventures to you. Not the least of her enjoyment of the incidents is derived from the serious attention you can always be counted on to bring to them. She tells you about them for two reasons—because your absorbed reaction to such episodes invests them with even greater significance than they actually possessed, and because it is her vainglorious and tasteless intent thus to boost her stock in your eyes.

She either knows or hopes that your reaction, deep down, is one of jealous concern, for all your air of detachment. And I have no doubt she gets added satisfaction out of that little drama which inevitably follows each such recital—namely, the drama in which she plays the role of wide-eyed, ineffably appealing because touchingly unworldly little girl, to your big, strong, knowing, protective man-of-the-world act.

I am sorry to have to spoil her game and your illusions concerning her supposed naivete—but such is the picture as I get it. Therefore, I think you would be wasting time and breath in continuing "to point out (the hazards) of these little incidents when they happen." She knows what she is doing, and what she can expect. She also, apparently, knows just how far she can go without embarrassing or unduly endangering herself. To you she may seem to be a tender and unwary innocent, but the incontrovertible fact of the matter is that she is a woman of 28—and, what is more, a product of Southern culture at that. And if there is a feminine flower of culture of a regional type who knows more than another about the nature of man, and the technique of managing him, it is that self-same Southern gal.

• • • •

The real question confronting you is this: Are you willing and would you be able to stomach, indefinitely or continuously, such frivolous trifling and such (when viewed through a bystander's eyes) transparent histrionics in the girl of your choice or the wife of your bosom? There is a school of Southern-girl thought which advances the theory that such tactics are necessary both for getting and holding your man, and supports it with the argument that a Southern man reckons his sweetheart's desirability by the degree or her appeal for other men.

• • • •

Adherents to this school of thought will tell you that Southern men flirt, too, and hence take it for granted that their sweethearts or wives shall do likewise, and that their reactions (if any) to such coquetry are apt to take one or the other of two forms—either they ignore it, through accepting it as a matter of course, or, on occasion, they challenge it, with the implication or the flat accusation that the woman is being cheap.

• • • •

Your rather fumbling and singularly literal-minded reaction to your sweetheart's coquetting suggests the existence of a strain of Puritan Father or Early Pioneer ancestry that doesn't exactly qualify you for dealing with her in the manner of kind to kind. But I advise you to adopt, as best you can, one or the other of the two techniques described above which Southern Gentlemen, so I'm told, employ. (And now I shall take to my storm cellar, until the commotion from below the Mason-Dixon line subsides.)

Hearing Defect Affects One of Ten Students

Dr. Fowler Warns Parents to Be on the Alert for Tell-Tale Signs.

By the Associated Press.

If your youngster doesn't answer when you call him to dinner, that doesn't prove he is disobedient or inattentive.

There's just as good a chance that he doesn't hear you, says Dr. Edmund Prince Fowler, of Washington, president of the American Society for the Hard of Hearing.

Dr. Fowler offers these figures as evidence: 3,000,000 out of 30,000,000 school children in the United States are suffering from some hearing defect. In most cases the impediment is slight, and passes unnoticed, but Dr. Fowler says it is likely to have its result in the form of an inferiority complex, poor grades at school, or unnecessary scoldings at home.

Some Possible Causes.

What causes these hearing defects? Dr. Fowler says it may be one of many things. Certain illnesses, like influenza, pneumonia, meningitis, diptheria, scarlet fever and measles, are likely to be followed by ear trouble.

Some of the time it's merely an accumulation of wax in the ears. That can be detected and corrected quickly. Sometimes a child may have damaged his ear by poking a pencil or stone into it. Even blowing the nose too hard may cause trouble.

Dr. Fowler says something can be done about all this. A regular yearly ear examination is on his "must" list. Then the first signs of trouble will be caught. Medical treatment can restore the hearing of many children to normal, or at least near normal.

Signs of Danger.

If the damage has been permanent, training in lip reading can help take the place of perfect hearing.

Dr. Fowler warns parents to be on the alert if their children continually ask to have words repeated, if they can't tell from what direction the sound is coming, if they complain of noise or pain in the ear. Those, he says, are sure signs of danger.

Room Decorating With Wall Brackets Aids Novel Effect

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

We're carried away with the possibility of wall brackets for achieving new and different effects in decorating. Five of them grouped over a mantel to hold a collection of figurines, of small pitchers or unusual glass will bring individuality to any room.

Brackets are excellent solutions to the problem of how to make an insignificant window look more important. First drape the window rather elaborately, then have three gilt brackets grouped on each side to hold ornaments that repeat or accent the color of the draperies.

An uninteresting corner of a room can be brightened, not to mention distinguished, by having a whole group of brackets to display some special collection. Mrs. Lauritz Melchoir, wife of the Metropolitan opera singer, has a lovely collection of little porcelain birds on brackets on both walls of a corner that would otherwise be rather dull.

Another pleasant grouping of brackets was around and above the mirror of a lacy skirted dressing table. On these brackets tiny vases for small flowers seemed quite attractive and appropriate.

Brcakets are offered in a variety of finishes and styles. On gilt they are most popular, but we also see them often in mahogany, in pickled pine, in maple, in mirror, or in white painted metal. You may have your choice of mood as well as detail, for some are as dignified as a lorgnette—others are as casual as slacks.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

THE DIPLOMATIC CORPS.

More than half of the foreign ambassadors and ministers in this Capital are married to wives of other nationalities than their own . . . When they reached the rather advanced marrying age of diplomats they were usually far from home, but even in alien lands there was no shortage of girls willing to share the rigors of a diplomatic career.

These foreign marriages are no handicap to the diplomats' careers, either; maybe they wind up as ambassador or minister to wifey's country, partly because of her good connections . . . Perhaps the home office thought a few influential relatives wouldn't hurt.

But several foreign offices have now called a halt on these foreign marriages by their diplomats; maybe the home girls put on the pressure.

* * * *

Often these international marriages lead to complications . . . For example, when Count Robert van der Straten-Ponthoz, Ambassador of the Belgians, goes to Brussels for a vacation or to have a chat with King Leopold, he usually goes by way of Buenos Aires, because the countess is the daughter of an eminent and affluent Argentine cattle baron . . .

"—3 bachelor diplomats in prison"

In these turbulent times the life of a diplomat is no bed of roses . . . He may return from a Washington cocktail party any late afternoon and find that the status quo back home has been upset, and perhaps the new crowd wants a new ambassador . . .

Quite a few of them have been through revolutions, putsches, great political turmoil; several have spent transitional periods in prison.

* * * *

By an odd coincidence, three of the eminent bachelors in the Washington Diplomatic Corps have cooled their heels behind the bars . . . They are Faik Konitza, of Albania; Pedro Martinez Fraga, of Cuba, and Demetrios Sicilianos, of Greece.

Mr. Konitza was once sentenced to death in a political ruckus, and is able now to face the prospect of matrimony with comparative equanimity.

* * * *

Most members of the diplomatic corps were born in the eighties, and are now in their fifties . . . The typical diplomat was approaching 30 or was just past that age when the World War began 24 years ago.

Some of them fought through the war and were wounded; others put in a year or two at the front.

Still others, over their valiant protestations, were kept at their diplomatic chores, on the assumption that a wily, experienced diplomat is equal to at least 20,000 soldiers. (A few gifted diplomats, of course, are the equal of 300,000 soldiers.)

"—the Czar's guard was plotting"

As a military cadet, Alexander Antonovich Troyanovsky, the Soviet Ambassador, was assigned to guard the Czar . . . It was a somewhat embarrassing assignment, because at that time Mr. Troyanovsky was plotting to overthrow the Czar . . . However, he managed to execute both assignments faultlessly; nothing serious happened to the Czar while Cadet Troyanovsky was guarding him; and the Czar was eventually overthrown.

* * * *

Few of the diplomats I have encountered remind me much of those supernaturally devious, urbane and erudite diplomats in, for example, the novels of E. Phillips Oppenheim . . . They all have a great deal of poise and presence at critical moments, such as a White House dinner once or twice a year, or an annual regret about the war debts, just like the diplomats in the romances.

* * * *

But behind the diplomatic facade they are, it goes without saying, a most human lot . . . Even the formidable Sir Ronald Lindsay, of the British Empire, has twice won raises in wages for learning diligently to read and speak Russian and Persian . . . In the locker room of a Washington golf club, in their shorts, they resemble us lesser mortals; and I think they enjoy it. The diplomats in the novels always seemed to be wearing tin underpants, ankle-length, which isn't true of those in real life.

Va. Infantry Regiment Reaches Virginia Beach

Norfolk, Va., Aug. 14 (AP).—The First Infantry Regiment of the Virginian National Guard, composed of 1,100 enlisted men and 70 officers, arrived at the State Military Reservation today for the two-week training period.

Under the command of Col. J. Fulmer Bright, Richmond's mayor, the Guardsmen began rolling into the reservation at Virginia Beach shortly before noon, and several hours later had settled down to regulation camp routine.

Grice Quits 'Battle' To Enjoy the Show

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Aug. 14.—J. Cleveland Grice, Hagerstown attorney, announced a few hours before the deadline for withdrawing, that he would not be a candidate for attorney general. He had filed his certificate several weeks ago.

In withdrawing he said he could "enjoy the show better as a regular Democratic worker than as a candidate for politicians."

Berkeley to Cut School Year as Aid Is Refused

County System Denied Secondary Help This Year.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Aug. 14.—Reduction of the usual nine months to eight months for the coming year was indicated as necessary by Superintendent of Berkeley County Schools G. William Ropp here yesterday following receipt of a telegram from State Supt. W. W. Trent that there would be no secondary State aid for the county schools this year.

The telegram said:

"The ability of your county with primary aid and local revenue to finance more than 90 per cent of your school budget places you above and beyond those counties sharing secondary aid which, with that aid, can finance only 90 per cent of their budget. Reduction in secondary aid available equivalent to 10 per cent of county budgets."

The local budget, already approved by the board here, called for expenditures totaling approximately $326,000. It had asked $25,000 in secondary aid. It was reasoned from the telegram that the county would have been eligible for secondary aid only if it needed in excess of $32,600, or more than 10 per cent of the total estimated expenditures.

Ropp said the budget was prepared for only the minimum of expenditures based on the experience of previous years, and he could not see immediately how there could be reductions.

Pastor Calls Church Real Foe of Hitler

'Y' Worker Warns of Drift Toward World Conflict.

The German people may follow Hitler's political, economic and governmental policies, but they never will worship him as their spiritual savior, declared Dr. Homer Ethan Wark, guest preacher last evening at the Foundry Methodist Church.

"When Hitler tells the people what they shall worship, said the speaker, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Clarksburg, W. Va., "the real life-and-death struggle between the church and the state will begin, a struggle that is not far off.

"Hitler is out to crush the church," he charged, "because the church and the Bible are semi-Jewish and anything Jewish is damned in his mind forever. Some are even trying to prove that Jesus was not a Jew, a thing that, if it were not so serious, would be funny.

Church Shares Blame.

"The churches in Germany are partly to blame for this present condition," said Dr. Wark, "because for many years they leaned to the state for support, lacked dynamic message and had no social consciousness."

Those nearest to the Rev. Martin Niemoeller, Lutheran minister sentenced to a concentration camp by Hitler, doubt that he ever will return alive, Dr. Wark told the congregation.

Fears New War Ahead.

Another world war may be the result of the "brambles" who thirst for power and, desiring another nation, simply take it, declared Page McK. Etchison, religious work secretary of the Central Y. M. C. A., who occupied the pulpit at Gunton Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church.

Basing his discussion on the "Parable of the Trees," the speaker said that "brambles" sit in high places because capable, well-qualified men and women will not leave their "'sweetness'—their own personal affairs—to serve mankind."

"Civilization looks on in horror," declared Mr. Etchison, referring to the Far East situation, "as the 'bramble king' runs amuck, killing innocent men, women and children in the most brutal and inhuman fashion ever known."

"The day of the Christian martyr is not over," Dr. Herrick Black Young told Georgetown Presbyterian parishioners, paying tribute to the Rev. Roger C. Cumberland, American missionary recently slain in Iraq.

Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Mission and former newspaperman, the speaker lauded the character of the young Presbyterian field worker who, according to reports, was murdered on June 17 by fanatics who gained entrance to his home under the guise of friendship.

Young served for 10 years as Presbyterian missionary, news correspondent and college professor in Iran (Persia).

"Our unwillingness to help others in time of need, our vindictiveness in the face of wrong, and our ignoble anchorage in the face of the world's great need are things that put the blush of shame on the face of God," Dr. Simpson B. Daugherty said at Memorial United Brethren Church.

Bible Study Group Will Be Largest in History of Institution.

Massanetta Springs, Va., Aug. 14. Dr. William E. Hudson, conference manager, said that the Bible conference opening tomorrow will be the largest and most pretentious in the 17 years history of Massanetta.

Representatives from more than 30 states and 18 denominations will be in attendance, Dr. Hudson said. In addition 20-world famous speakers are on the program for the conference, which is to continue through August 28.

The educational, historic pageant, "Massanetta Mirrors," will be presented August 16, 25 and 26 in connection with the conference. A one-act Biblical play, "The Terrible Meek," will be presented August 19.

A feature of the first week of the conference will be the ministers' forum, held daily.

Among the speakers on the program are Robert E. Speer, who will speak on "World Missions," and Dr. George A. Hudson, a missionary to China. Dr. Albert W. Beaven, Rochester, N. Y., will discuss religious conditions in Europe during his four days at the conference.

Special days have been designated for the various denominations of Harrisonburg and the Valley. The dates are: Church of the Brethren, August 22; Presbyterians, August 23; United Brethren in Christ, August 24; Baptists, August 25, and Methodists, August 26.

800 Attend 3-Hour Dedication For New Beth Sholom Temple

Dedication services at the synagogue of Beth Sholom Congregation yesterday drew a crowd of 800 to Eighth and Shepherd streets northwest for a three-hour program outside and within the new temple.

Erected at a cost of over $100,000, the building is to accommodate 550 in the social hall, while classroom facilities are available for 150 in the Hebrew School, or Talmud Torah.

Delivering an address of welcome, Solomon H. Feldman, president of the Congregation, announced that an educational director will be engaged to expand activities of the Hebrew school, which holds classes after public schools have recessed for the day. A cultural program for young people and adults of the congregation also will be developed, he stated.

At conclusion of speeches from the synagogue steps, the key to the building was offered for sale at an auction and went to Mr. and Mrs. tion's former quarters at 4820mhh David Zoslow for $1,000. With transfer of scrolls from the congregation's former quarters at 4820 Georgia avenue northwest to its new home, flags were raised over the entrance and the throng moved inside for the religious service.

Samuel Vigoda, famous New York Cantor, made his first appearance in Washington as he led a choir of 15 voices. Dedicatory addresses were offered in Yiddish and English by Rabbi M. H. Levinson and Rabbi Solomon H. Metz.

La Farge, Murals Painter Here, Dies

Mount Carmel, Conn., Aug. 14 (AP). Bance La Farge, artist known especially for his religious paintings, died at his home today after several months' illness. A son of the late John La Farge, also a prominent artist, he was 72.

Born at Newport, R. I., he served an apprenticeship in the New York studio of his distinguished father and later studied 12 years in Europe.

1,675 in July On General Relief in D. C.

Cost of Assistance Falls 32% From June, Security Unit States.

Cases receiving general relief in the District dropped 25 per cent to 1,675 and cost of assistance fell 32 per cent to $40,000 from June to July, the Social Security Board reported yesterday.

District Public Welfare officials said last night the decline was due to the sharp slash in appropriations for such work in the current fiscal year. Funds provided by Congress this year totaled $900,000 as against $1,333,000 last year.

General relief, the Social Security Board explained, includes cases receiving public assistance only and excludes needy blind, aged, dependent children, aid to veterans, maternal and child health and welfare services, hospitalization, burials, earnings under the works program, loans and subsistence from the Farm Security Administration or Federal surplus commodities. Aid under the classification considered was in cash or in kind.

Preliminary figures for 33 States and the District showed a decrease of 1 per cent to 866,992 in the number of cases given relief last month and in increase of less than 1 per cent in the total cost, amounting to $23,792,409.

The board's report was based on voluntary statements from agencies in 108 cities. Its figures indicate the amount of relief provided and not necessarily the need for relief, the board was careful to point out.

In 64 of the 108 cities decreases in the number of cases were reported. The greatest drop in costs was 53 per cent, reported by Charlotte, N. C.

Bull Run Grange Fete Set for Friday; Jousting on Program.

Manassas, Va., Aug. 14.—One of the outstanding events in Prince William County for the year will be the Bull Run Grange field day and tournament at Peter's Field, Haymarket, Friday.

Elaborate plans are being made by the Bull Run Grange committee for its program, including a baby show, athletic contests, a doll show, slow auto race and jousting tournaments for both riders (horses) and automobiles.

The program opens at 10 a. m. with the baby show and athletic contests. The doll show and slow auto races are scheduled for 11 a. m. Following lunch, the tournaments will be staged. The "queen of the tournament," to be chosen by the leading knight, will be crowned immediately after the tournament.

At 3 p. m. a baseball game is scheduled between the Middleburg, Va., and Kensington, Md., athletic clubs.

Last, but not least, will be the "queen's ball" at 9:30 p. m. in the new Haymarket High School auditorium.

Luray Fire Head Put on Committee

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Luray, Va., Aug. 14.—Before leaving here Saturday F. H. Wheeler, president of the State Firemen's Association, named Amos Bradley, of Luray, to the executive committee for the coming year. Wheeler said that it was the first time in his term of office that he ever had appointed his executive committee in the convention city but that he thought it was due Bradley because of his work in making this year's state convention a success.

Bradley was chairman of the general committee on arrangements and is president of the Luray Fire Department. He succeeds R. B. Barker, of Newport News, who was elected secretary. Other members of the committee are E. J. Lamb, Harrisonburg; E. H. Dabney, Staunton; E. H. Rouse, Orange; James M. Duncan, jr., Alexandria, all reappointed.

Clear Skies and Warmer

The Weather Bureau predicted clear skies and rising temperatures for today. The mercury rose to a high of 94 yesterday at about 4 p. m., starting from a low of 66 at 5:30 a. m. A humidity of .53 rounded out a typical Washington August day.

2 Cities Will Ask U. S. to Prevent Air Route Change

Hagerstown, Md., Aug. 14 (AP).—Delegations from Hagerstown and Frederick will confer tomorrow with Charles I. Stanton, chief of the Engineering Division of the Department of Air Commerce, to protest a proposed change in the air route between Washington and Pittsburgh.

The change probably would lead to the removal of air beacons along the route, one of which is at the Hagerstown Airport.

Hagerstown only recently completed a $200,000 airport, and officials said they had expected airmail service to be established here soon. Changing of the route, they said would prevent the development of such plans.

Representatives of the chambers of commerce and city officials of both towns will meet with Stanton in Washington at 11 a. m.

Utility Will Expand.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., Aug. 14.—The Consumers Utility Co. has announced plans for increasing the output of the local plant 100 per cent, E. C. Goss, manager, stated. The present plant was built in 1935 at a cost of $75,000, exclusive of considerable equipment removed from the old one.

Norma Shearer Scores Triumph As a Magnificent 'Antoinette'

BELL.

THE tumbrils rumbled through the streets of a frenzied and vengeful Paris, the long-roll sounded the muffled dirge of royal tyranny and the glistening blade of the guillotine cleaved the veil of eternity to bring to a tragic close one of the cinema's most imposing demonstrations of its illimitable capacity for magnitude and magnificence when Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's production of "Marie Antoinette" was presented before an invitational preview audience in Loew's Palace Theater yesterday morning.

It is a mammoth achievement that has been wrought in this stupendous work. Not only is "Marie Antoinette" immense in physical proportions. In its emotional, dramatic and thunderingly melodramatic exposition of the salient episodes in the life of a capricious, fascinating and ill-starred young woman it is as commanding as the regal splendors against which her life was lived.

The screen narrative that has been so adroitly devised by Claudine West, Donald Ogden Stewart and Ernest Vajda, inspired in part by the Stefan Zweig book, traces the career of Marie Antoinette, ninth child of the Empress Maria Theresa, of Austria, from the time of her betrothal to the Dauphin of France—an alliance essential to the success of the Franco-Austrian pact negotiated by Choiseul—to that day of doom in 1793 when the guillotine ended the life of the Queen of France in her thirty-eighth year. Into that brief span are packed the extremes of happiness and despair, the fleeting ecstacies of two short loves, the harassment of cruel court intrigue and the desperate anguish of multiplied tragedy.

The picture begins gaily. The early sequences are dedicated to scenes of royal pomp, the revelries of a profligate nobility and the prophetic jealousies and intrigues of a court honeycombed with traitorous schemers, manipulated like puppets on a string by Du Barry, the milliner's apprentice elevated to a throne, and the cunning Duke d'Orleans, whose family tree quite palpably was the one that bore the serpent in the Garden of Eden. The progress of the drama then pursues a crescendo of fury, savagery, terror and tears, with the poverty and squalor of the people gradually overshadowing, and eventually blotting out, the grandeur of royal France.

The pattern of the play, of course, is not new. It follows the general design of an infinite number of earlier subjects that have had their roots in the overwhelming events that culminated in the French Revolution. The tremendous appeal of "Marie Antoinette" in the view of thoughtful adult audiences must lie in the superlative skill with which story, interpretation and investiture have been co-ordinated and welded into a Gargantuan entity that never is deflected from its major purpose or marred by any flaw either in conception or execution.

It is by no means a foregone conclusion that "Marie Antoinette" will prove an infallible masterpiece in the eyes of every spectator. Its running time consumes the greater part of two-and-a-half hours. It can lay no claim to newness beyond that of unprecedented scope and splendor. But out of the splendid capabilities of a singularly gifted cast has come a concert of artistic effort that makes this monumental work, at base, an enormously moving human document.

This is due primarily to the incomparably fine work of Norma Shearer in the title role, and Robert Morley, as Louis XVI, and secondarily to the performances of John Barrymore, as Louis XV; Gladys George, as Du Barry; Joseph Schildkraut, as the Duke d'Orleans, and, of course, Tyrone Power, in the romantic role of Count Axel de Fersen, a character that is portrayed admirably, if, at times, with a little too much repression.

Her portrayal of the exhausting role of Marie Antoinette stamps Miss Shearer as the undisputed first actress of the cinema.

But this purports to be no detailed review of a far-flung and flamboyant picture—merely a sketchy resume of a few first impressions, set down only a few hours after the screening of a much-discussed production which, in the large view, lives up to all of the extravagant things that have been said about it.

There seems to be scant likelihood that a greater or more satisfying film play will reach the screens of the country in any very near future.

It is inevitable that comparisons will be drawn, in the minds of those whose memories date back two decades, between "Passion," the filmed story of the life of Mme. Du Barry, and "Marie Antoinette," since both were drawn from the same events in much the same sequence and design. Even with Pola Negri and Emil Jannings, in the respective roles of Du Barry and Louis XV, and with Ernst Lubitsch's fine direction, "Passion" was a pygmy by the side of "Antoinette."

Tonight is the night when, barring cloudbursts, earthquakes and acts of God, E. M. Loew's new Mount Vernon Theater will be thrown open to the public to engage the interest of those whose curiosity has been aroused by the announcement of this innovation in motion picture presentation. The Mount Vernon, as everyone should know by now, is the motor car openairium, where the audience will be seated in its own automobiles, on a series of ramps, facing a huge screen and a magnified battery of sound horns to enjoy celluloid entertainment under the stars.

For tonight's opening the 40-piece American Legion Band will be in attendance to supply spirited music for the occasion and traffic will be handled by a special detail of Virginia State police, with 40 ushers to assist in parking and another group of attaches to wipe off the windshields to insure perfect vision.

The feature of the opening bill will be "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," costarring Claudette Colbert and Gary Cooper. Performances will be given at 7:40 and 9:50 p. m., with dedicatory ceremonies beginning as early as 6:30.

The inaugural policy of the new venture contemplates two changes of bill a week, beginning hereafter on Sundays and Thursdays. The attraction this Thursday and for the remainder of the week will be "Her Jungle Love," with Dorohty Lamour, Ray Milland and Lynne Overman.

Admission is 35 cents per person, children and cars free. The Mount Vernon is located 3 miles south of Alexandria on the Richmond highway.

It begins to look as if our old friend Estelle Taylor, who hasn't played a Washington engagement for too long, might be in the offing, or somewhere. The last few visits have been as a vocalist; the earlier ones on the screen. But the point is that along comes a postcard from Atlantic City saying: "Just thought of you and thought I'd let you know. (Signed) ESTELLE TAYLOR." Either Estelle has a fine press agent or a very elegant memory, I wouldn't be sure which.

Through the interest of a civic-minded Washington merchant, the most popular boy and girl in the cast of "Going Native," the annual, all-local revue, to be presented at Loew's Capitol Theater beginning Friday, will be awarded a free round-trip vacation jaunt to Bermuda. The Ross Jewelry Co. is the donor of these prizes, through Manager Ann Sherbert.

The voters, too, will come in for a little of the "velvet." After the balloting is concluded, some lucky man and woman "out front" will be given prizes of $100 each.

Ballots will be inclosed in "Going Native" programs, distributed to patrons beginning Friday. The voting will continue through Thursday, August 25. Votes may be cast either in the Capitol lobby, or directly across the street in the Ross establishment.

Incidentally, Producer Gene Ford and Dance Director Chester Hale proclaim that, on the basis of rehearsals to date, the sixth edition of "Going Native" will prove a grand surprise and an exciting entertainment. On the basis of the first audition, I wouldn't be at all surprised if they are right.

The Post's New Yorker

New York, Aug. 14.

THE NEWSREEL CAMERAMEN meet as many celebrities as do the Broadway reporters. And their finished product seldom tells the whole story . . . These, therefore, are the "cuts, gleaned from the memories of Americans most eminent newsreel-photographers—concerning the people whose names make news . . . and pictures.

* * * *

Mayor LaGuardia won't pose unless he first has had an opportunity to shave ten minutes before the picture was taken. Failing that, he'll put on professional makeup. Otherwise, his heavy beard makes him look too swarthy . . . Herbert Hoover's screen personality is rated the "deadest." He insists upon reading from his script while the camera grinds. Once, in Palo Alto, the former President was advised to memorize his speech in the hope that this would be an improvement. Hoover studied his speech for two entire days, faltered in delivering it, and since then reverted to his reading custom.

* * * *

GOVERNOR HOFFMAN of New Jersey, for the first time in his career, shies at posing for the newsreel now. This is a result of his visit to a movie, after he had issued the first Hauptman reprieve—and hearing himself hissed and booed.

* * * *

GEORGE BERNARD SHAW, when he's alone, will pose in any manner the cameramen direct. When others are present, however, his supreme ego prevails and he becoms prima donnaish . . . Cameramen dislike Commander Byrd ever since his first Polar expedition. At that time he exacted a contract from them in which they agreed not to write magazine articles or books about the expedition. The photographers refused to accompany him on his last expedition. A Kansas City cameraman was finally induced to go when some men—posing as members of the board of directors of his company—phoned to inform him that the signal honor of his making the trip had been duly voted after eliminating the others.

* * * *

JOE LOUIS, fearless fighter, memorized a ten-word speech for two hours, faced the camera—and became frightened after speaking two words:

* * * *

BARBARA HUTTON has been reluctant to pose for the newsreels ever since she saw the sweepstakes winners in the movies. The Countess has a dread fear that she'll appear as funny as they do . . . Father Divine won't pose unless he's paid. The March of Time is reported to have paid him $5,000 for its recent screening of his activities . . . HENRY FORD used to pose annually with Harvey Firestone and Thomas Edison at Fort Myers, Fla., until Edison died. Now Ford won't pose except to aid Berry Schools in Florida, or in front of a new model Ford car . . . Babe Ruth, when asked to pose at the opening of the pheasant season, refused to shoot a pheasant discovered on the ground, although it would provide the easiest camera shot. Babe insisted upon the sporting thing—waiting until the bird had taken flight.

* * * *

SIR MALCOLM CAMPBELL, the auto speed king, was the most considerate of the lot. During prohibition he brought liquor from England only for the newsreel men. Before making his record attempts at Daytona Beach, he told them to get as much rest as they wanted; that if he found the conditions favorable, he'd give each of them one hour's notice of his readiness to make the run.

* * * *

WHEN THE DUKE OF WINDSOR, then Prince of Wales, visited Havana, a cameraman found greater favor in the eyes of a lady both were wooing. The cameramen was racently recalled to New York immediately, lest conditions be made unpleasant at his employer's London branch.

* * * *

LAURENCE STALLINGS suffered a toothache while screening the warfare in Ethiopia and could find no dentist. He fortified himself with Scotch, while the tooth was cut out with a knife. Now that he's back, part of the jawbone had to be removed because of infection . . . Max Baer is the camera men's delight. He never needs a rehearsal and always can improve upon the photographer's ideas.

* * * *

Little

"Escapade," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production that introduced Luise Rainer to American audiences three years ago last month, was revived yesterday at the Little Theater as chief feature of a bill that also includes "La Cucaracha" as an extra added attraction.

The original release of "Escapade" was nationally hailed for its revelation of the brilliant talents of a new young actress for whom quick stardom was prophesied. Those predictions, of course, all have come true, with Miss Rainer, since, a two-time winner of the Academy award for the best feminine screen acting in two successive years. In "Escapade" she is cast as a quaint, elfish, little lady's maid, who falls in love with a noted artist who has involved himself in a pretty scandal by having painted a seminude for which the wife of a friend posed as model. The locale of the piece is Vienna in its most colorful and romantic days, when art, music and gayety were in the ascendant.

William Powell plays the part of the guilty artist, who eludes an embarrassing situation through the infatuated connivance of the demure Leopoldine, and many others of note appear in prominent supporting roles, foremost among them Frank Morgan, Virginia Bruce, Reginald Owen, Mady Christians, Laura Hope Crews and Henry Travers, all artists of the first rank.

"La Cucaracha," a short-reel subject of Mexican flavor, was one of the most notable early examples of the effectiveness of the improved Technicolor process of natural color photography on the screen. It is also heavily charged with catchy music. Musical interpolations, by the way, likewise comprise an important element of entertainment in "Escapade."

Added short subjects and picturized news events complete a program of more than ordinary interest and worth.

Trans-Lux

The world war trend is vividly portrayed in the unusually interesting news section of this week's program at the Trans-Lux Theater. France and Czechoslovakia are seen making extensive preparations to increase their air service; France's men are on parade in Spain, observing the third anniversary of the Spanish Civil War, as the Russo-Jap conflict is halted for a moment by armistice, and Paraguay and Bolivia sign a peace treaty.

The news is further enlivened by the return of F. D. R. to Pensacola, the inauguration of a clipper service between Seattle and Juneau, Alaska, and the introduction of a new type of supertransit bus.

The local scene registers heaviest with the spectacular reception to Douglas Corrigan. His shot with official Dennis Mulligan is a gem of rich humor. Visitors in unusual numbers to the Yellowstone, and the Grand Canyon, are responsible for a sequence of pictures of these national splendors that surpass those of foreign places, as frequently shown in screen shorts at the Trans-Lux.

Among the shorts, there is an "Our Gang" comedy, a travelogue on Holland, with accompanying narrative by Lowell Thomas, a sport review of the most thrilling moments in recent sport classics and a Disney cartoon.

Pinch-Hitting Star Indulges In Day Dream

By Clark Gable.

Written for the United Press.

Hollywood, Aug. 14.—When this old world is really spinning on an even keel—or, to be more technical about it, if you like, on a prime axis—things will be different.

Movie actors still may fill in for newspaper columnists on vacation, but turn about will be fair play. I could get a swell wallop out of a marquee sign that announced in electric lights:

Frederick C. Othman and Myrna Loy in "TOO HOT TO HANDLE."

If nothing were biting but sunfish I could catch 'em and like 'em providing I could lie back on the well known mossy bank and think of Othman working under the lights at the studio.

It isn't any sadistic tendency on my part—and that's a good two-bit phrase in any man's language—but merely a sense of fair play. You know, the old stuff. It's a poor rule that won't work both ways. Turn about is fair play, etc. You can find a dozen in the old mixim book.

At night, when the bullfrogs were croaking and a cool breeze riding in the pine trees around my cabin, it would be swell to think of Othman sitting in a hot room back in Hollywood, studying his script for the next day's shooting.

Late in the morning when I rolled out of the bunk all set for a platter of crisp bacon and eggs, there'd be a lot of satisfaction in the knowledge that Fred had reported into Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer promptly at 8:30 to find Jack Conway, our director, waiting for him.

Shake a Leg, Fella.

"Hello, Fred, let's get going. We're behind schedule, you know. Are you all set for the rescue scene this morning? We're working on the back lot. Hurry up now, Fred, get into your things. We're ready for you."

And out on the back lot, beneath a sun that plays no phoney role in a tropical scene, they'd be setting fire to an airplane with Myrna Loy trapped in the cockpit.

By that time, Fred would understand the job and just fall into his part. While I went down leisurely to the lake and enjoyed a swim, he would be climbing into that plane and hauling Myrna out of there, pronto.

He might have to do it a dozen times or so, because they like to get a variety of camera angles on those scenes. But Fred wouldn't mind.

Being a newspaper man, he would know all about the newsreel business anyway and it wouldn't be difficult for him to follow the script when he falls in love with Myrna. The whole thing would be giving Fred a swell break, if you ask me, and I'd be getting what they call a well-earned rest.

Worth Anticipating.

Allowing for three or four hours of shut-eye, in the heat of the day, I could get up and read for a while, or maybe paddle around on the shady side of the lake, knowing all the time that my job was being filled in according to Hoyle and Hollywood standards. Fred would be listening patiently to Jack Conway as they shot the scene over for the last time and then they'd go into the next one on one of the sound stages.

By 6 o'clock when I was looking over a table heaped with provender, Fred would be almost half through the day's work.

Oh, yes, it would be around about 4 o'clock in the afternoon that Jack decided the company had better work that night.

This would continue for two weeks, or maybe a month, depending on how long a vacation I had.

Myrna Loy wouldn't mind who played the role opposite her, because she has the peculiar ability to work in harmony with almost anyone and if she's in a scene she performs perfectly, no matter who the man is.

So from our end it looks like a good bet. Lined up on my side already I've got Spencer Tracy and Bob Taylor, Leo Carrillo, Walter Pidgeon, and a lot of other fellows. Tyrone Power is with us and Bing Crosby, John Boles and Charlie McCarthy.

In Hollywood

HEDDA HOPPER

Hollywood, Calif., Aug. 14.—Unless Warners use more care, they're going to find the parents of American youth in revolt over their "Dead End" kids, whom they call the "Crime School" boys.

Those pictures are being discussed in every home, and not in a nice way. The ease and joy with which these boys get away with everything, short of murder, is not an elevating example to the youth of our country or any other. And it's tough food for parents to digest.

They ran the gangster pictures into the ground, until censorship clamped down on them. Now "Little Caesars" are angelic district attorneys.

The "Crime School" kids are tough eggs, and lose their punch when they go goody-goody. But when they deliberately challenge Mickey Rooney to get publicity, they're going a step too far. Mickey's an actor and a darned fine one, too. These kids boast of their gang and conquests. I thought we were trying to wipe out gangs. Maybe Hollywood is just the place to glorify 'em.

Irving Cobb, who's done about everything a man can do, was required to drive a car in "Arkansas Traveller." But that was one of the things he's never become acquainted with. The fifteenth take was perfect, except he couldn't stop—drove the car right into the river.

Well, well, Madeleine Carroll is not returning to America. Dissatisfied with her last three pictures—what with income tax and husband, she's decided to stop off—at home.

The other night at Slapsie Maxie's and Bob Pastor's fight, a colored man in the preceding bout was beaten frightfully. They let it go eight rounds as per schedule. With both eyes closed, he had to be helped from the ring. As he passed Sid Grauman, Sid put a roll of bills in the man's hand. Don't believe anyone else saw it.

Nice to know Mack Sennet has been working on "The Illusionist" for Walter Wanger. He's also writing the life story of Clara Bow and hoping to star her in the picture. Good luck to both. Sweetest picture I've seen of Clara was with her new-born baby in her arms.

With a cast chosen more than a year ago, a crew and company of 100 waiting to start, special cameramen, who learned the technique of Technicolor, and with Woody Van Dyke rarin' to go—it's interesting to note that M-G-M has brought out Sidney Howard at a salary of $6,000 a week to "lick the story problem" on "Northwest Passage. Other writers, just as good, have tried. Frances Marion, Bob Sherwood, Frances Goodrich and Al Hackett all had a whack at it. Here's hoping Sidney succeeds, and quickly.

These worthy State officials who are trying to get our Hollywood actresses to go stumping for them, have made themselves a little ridiculous. Lila Lee was approached, so was Sally Rand. But Sally, having finished her picture in six days, is flying East to play in "Idiot's Delight" and "Susan and God." Can't keep that girl down. Did you know she was a local girl. And was one of the models in "Dressmaker From Paris," which starred Leatrice Joy some 19 or 15 years back?

Two Governors, frock-coated and high-hatted, called on Shirley Temple in Boston—and caught her napping. They couldn't wait half an hour, so left without receiving Shirley's police badge.

They must have acted on Darryl Zanuck's remark—that English pictures not only have to be good but that showmanship must be added to sell them in this country, for Charles Laughton and Elsa Lancaster are arriving to make personal appearances in the East with "Vessel of Wrath," Laughton's latest one. Which means that income tax must have been taken care of.

When Sidney Lanfield heard of Jack Oakie's divorce, he said, "And to think that three years ago Jack nearly drove me crazy. Every time I wanted him for a scene he was telephoning Venita. I'm sure they're still in love with each other, but too stubborn to give in."

Sports | The Washington Post | Sports

★★★ WASHINGTON: MONDAY, AUGUST 15, 1938 15

Nats Beat Boston, 7-1, for Third Straight Victory

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

'Lucky Wesley.'

Wesley Cheek Ferrell has long been accused of being a lucky pitcher—one of those guys whose colleagues score plenty of runs for him—but of Ferrell's luck there no longer is any doubt.

Within 36 hours after he was cast adrift by a Washington team whose immediate objective was fourth place and the $400 individual shares from the world series spoils, Ferrell is given a job by no less than the New York Yankees. That means considerable to the Ferrell purse.

POVICH.

Ferrell finds himself eligible not only for the world series in which the Yankees are sure-fire to figure, but eligible as well for a full share of the series money. In the event that the Yankees win the series, Ferrell might inherit a check for as much as $6,000. That he will be voted a full share by the Yankee players is possible inasmuch as the Yankees are traditionally generous in their world-series splits, but even a half-share would be quite acceptable to Ferrell, we are sure.

And it is Ferrell's added luck to join up with a team which, like the Nats, figure to get plenty of runs for him. The temperamental right-hander thus is fairly dripping with good fortune, because with a weak-hitting team there is grave doubt that Ferrell would be able to get by.

Yanks Save $7,500

What the Yankees' maneuver in signing Ferrell amounted to was a clear saving of $7,500 by the Yankees. When Clark Griffith asked waiver on Ferrell, the Yankees like every other club in the two big leagues, made no claim to his services which would have entailed a $7,500 waiver price payment to Griffith. By waiting until Ferrell was released by Griffith and signing him as a free-agent, the Yankees' front office saved the $7,500 fee.

And speaking of Ferrell's luck, how about Clark Griffith's? Griffith, 'tis true, was euchered out of the $7,500 waiver price, but on that score he is not particularly disturbed. He didn't want Ferrell on his ball club for more reasons than have been disclosed and cheerfully made him a free agent. But Griffith nevertheless figures to show a profit on the deal.

Because the Yankees have promised to pitch Ferrell against the Nats in the series starting here tomorrow, and the Old Fox is thus presented with a tremendous gate attraction, Ferrell in a Yankee uniform, pitching against the Washington club, is a state of affairs calculated to set the turnstiles clicking merrily at Griffith Stadium this week. And in the added attendance, Griffith will recoup all that he lost when he failed to obtain the waiver price for the pitcher.

Ferrell Gambles, Too.

There is evidence, too, that Ferrell is gambling heavily on himself to be a winning pitcher with the Yankees. On reliable authority it has been learned that a clause in Ferrell's contract with the Yankees provides that he personally will receive the $7,500 waiver price if the Yankees retain him next season.

Ferrell has long been known as a smart pitcher, getting by with his cunning in lieu of a fast ball, but not until the terms of his contract with the Yankees became known was it suspected that he was a clever business man. And Ferrell has already profited from his release by the Nats, if the facts be known. Because when he was let out by the Washington club he was given 10 days' pay, which amounted to nearly $1,000. His pay with the Yankees started yesterday.

Griffith paid tribute to Ferrell's business acumen yesterday. "I've got to hand it to him," said the Nats' owner. "I tried to sell him to the Yankees and couldn't, and now he sells himself. I'm glad for him, but I know one thing—if he pitches against us this week, the Yankees will have to get 19 runs to win, because we figure to get 18 off Ferrell."

Griffith Is Happy.

The Nats owner is enjoying life hugely these days. That three-game Washington winning streak against the Boston Red Sox has made it a pleasant world for him. He has conjured new visions of finishing as high as second place. No longer is he aiming only to finish in the first division.

And Griffith's second-place dreams are not entirely without foundation. When the Nats beat the Red Sox for the third straight time yesterday, they cut the distance to third place to only four games. And only four games beyond are the second-place Cleveland Indians. The Red Sox have folded and the Indians are on the verge.

There has been a distinct turn for the better in the Nats' pitching. In a remarkable reversal of form they saw three pitchers—Dutch Leonard, Monte Weaver and Harry Kelley—go the route against the Red Sox. And each of them held the Boston club to a single run. Up in New York the pitching of the Nats was good enough to lick the Yankees three straight, but erratic fielding cost them two games.

And that the Nats can hit is no myth. Look at the top of the team batting averages and who do you find leading the league with a percentage of .293? Washington, that's who. The Nats don't need sensational pitching to win ball games. Just tolerable pitching will do the trick, in the light of the Nats' ability to go out and get runs. The pitcher who couldn't win 20 games a year for the Washington club is not much of a pitcher. In many respects, Washington's fourth-place status is a crying shame. A swell ball team has been hamstrung all season by pitching best described by one of those short and ugly words.

Nobody's Sacred in Pro League, Discovers Baugh, Told to Run

By "Slingin' Sammy" Baugh

(Forward Passing Champion of National Football League.)

This is my first offense as a sports writer, so kindly don't rough the passer, at least until I am squared away.

Speaking of sports writing—that gives me an idea. Folks have asked me what I have planned to do after my playing days are over. Well, I never saw any sports writers in the breadline, and they always seem to travel in good style.

SAMMY BAUGH.

And sports writers seem to see a lot that we other folks miss. For example, they saw me throw a pass to Charlie Malone in the Pittsburgh game last year. "It was a beautiful pass from Baugh to Malone for a 30-yard gain," they wrote. It was a beautiful pass all right, but Riley Smith threw that one, not I.

Right now, I want to refute a story they've been telling about me ever since I broke into the pro league. Up until this time, I've let it stand, but the thing ought to be cleared up. I don't like to be salling under any false pretenses.

The story I'm talking about is the one they tell about me and Coach Ray Flaherty the day I reported to the Redskins last year. Flaherty was pointing out the differences between pro football and college football and he was discussing passes with me. He said the pros were particular and that pass receivers weren't in the habit of jumping all over the lot for wild passes.

According to the story, Flaherty said, "Sammy, on those short passes where the ends cut sharp to the opposite side, you've got to lay that ball right up there for 'em. Throw it right at their eye."

The story went that I told Flaherty that was all right with me, but which eye did he mean?

That isn't true. I never said that. Coach Flaherty never leaves anything to our imagination. He is plenty thorough and specific. He made it all plain in the beginning. He told me I had to throw my passes at the right end's left eye and the left end's right eye, on those cut-back plays.

I was impressed by one thing immediately when I joined up with the professionals last year. Nobody is sacred in the pro league. When I was in college, they wouldn't let me run the ball. Down at Texas Christian University, if I carried the ball twice during a game, it was rare. I was supposed to be a forward passer and they didn't want me to take a chance of getting hurt as a ball carrier.

Well, they look at things differently in the pro league. The first thing I was told was that if I didn't know how to run the ball, I'd better learn pronto. Because they don't have much use for specialists in this league. If a fellow could pass, that ought to help him as a ball carrier, they pointed out. The opposition wouldn't know quite what to expect from him—a pass or a run.

And another thing. They told me that was a lot of nonsense about taking a chance of getting hurt as a ball carrier. There was more chance of getting hurt as a passer than as a runner, they said. And I found that to be plenty true. The passer is roughed a lot more than the ball carrier. I found that out.

I always did think I could run the ball if given the chance and, if I do say so myself, I was doing right fair with that pumpkin under my arm. I'm the kind of a ball carrier, though, who needs plenty of help from the blockers. I can't afford to be hit when I'm lugging that ball. Fellows like Cliff Battles and Tuffy Leemans can run over a tackler and knock him down, but I'm not built that way. Tall and kind of skinny as backfield men go, I've got to hop and skip and change my pace. Fellows like Leemans and Battles aren't bothered by the defense unless they are hit square with a good tackle. But if they lay a hand on me, they are pretty apt to stop me. As I was saying, I can't afford to get hit.

They can talk about their great college coaches and their psychology and everything, but the pros don't overlook the psychology angle, either. I don't know what the Redskins coaches thought about me deep down in their hearts when I joined the team, but they didn't take long to get to the bottom of things.

It was the opening game of my professional career. We were playing the New York Giants in Griffith Stadium. I've been in many an important college game and I never thought I would be nervous on a football field. But I was that night. I wanted to live up to all the nice things that had been said about me and I don't mind admitting I was just a bit shaky.

The Giants made the opening kick-off and we took the ball. Back there in the huddle, I learned that Coach Flaherty had given orders that our first play was to be a pass. When I heard that, my head swam a bit. He was putting me right on the spot. I tried to forget that this was pro football. "This is just another college game," I kept repeating to myself. It worked. When I got back there in the No. 4 back position to take the ball from center, I was plenty calm. I found Wayne Milner open and chucked to him for a 20-yard gain. I heard Flaherty yell from the bench, "Attabay, Sammy," and I knew he was plenty relieved, too.

Right now, I'm interested chiefly in one thing. I want to bat 1.000 in that All-Star game at Chicago against the Collegians. I was on the winning side with the College outfit last year, and I want to be on the winning side with the Redskins in this year's game. I think that can be done, too. In a future article, I'll try to tell you why.

* * * *

Yanks Sign Ferrell; May Hurl Tuesday

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 14.—Wesley (Prima-Donna) Ferrell, released by Washington's fourth-place Senators two days ago, came up with the New York Yankees—and what looks like a world series shot—today.

The temperamental right-hander, veteran of 12 years in the big time with Cleveland, Boston and Washington, was signed by the world champions to make up for the absence of Joe Vance. Vance, recently brought up from Kansas City, underwent an appendectomy last night and apparently is through for the season.

The New Yorkers are far in front in the pennant race, and are favored to get into their third straight world series, with its resultant cash benefits. Washington, although a pleasant surprise this year, is hardly rated to rise above fourth place.

The Yankees' manager, Joe McCarthy, will play the psychology angle in giving Ferrell his debut with Gehrig and company. All signs point to Wes making his first start against Washington in the series there beginning Tuesday.

Ferrell's acceptance by the Yankees comes as a surprise second only to his release by Washington Friday, since he had made overtures to several National League clubs. Although not so consistent as in some of his past years, the 30-year-old "nuthin' ball" artist had won 13 and lost 8—a record not to be sneezed at. It was believed the high salary he was drawing had something to do with the Nats' letting him go.

In recent weeks, the Yankee pitching has been getting along fine. Then, too, McCarthy was never one to look for the temperamental type of performer on his clubs. That was one of the reasons he traded Johnny Allen to Cleveland.

Abrams 6-5 Favorite To Win Over Mamakos

By Lewis F. Atchison.

The second and, perhaps, final chapter of one of the most natural knuckle rivalries spawned in these precincts since scholars of the old tin-type school settled their disputes on mud scows anchored beyond the law's arm in the Potomac will be written tonight at Griffith Stadium where Steve Mamakos trades punches with George Abrams. It will be over the ten-round route.

At least 4,000 fans will see the Southwest Greek lad make his bid for a higher ranking on the local fistic scale, a bid which may catapult him unexpectedly into the upper strata of fistiana if he wins. If he loses he probably will be marked as rough hewn timber, stout and dependable but unsuited for more than preliminary underpinning to rbetter fighters.

Abrams, victor over his amateur days' rival by a wide margin in their first professional entanglement six months ago, rules a 6-5 choice to repeat tonight, but the prevalence of Mamakos money may drive the betting down to even money at ringside. Mamakos, admittedly not on par with Abrams as a ringmaster but the tougher of the two, won a legion of new supporters by whipping Ivan Nedomatsky last week for his third consecutive triumph. It is on the last fight that the fans are pinning their hopes for a Mamakos victory.

Fans See Decision.

Those who support Abrams, and who are backing up their prediction with coin of the realm, contend that Abrams has advanced more than Steve in the half-year since their first meeting, and will outpoint him even more decisively than he did in that bloody first battle. All they hope for is a decision because it is a foregone conclusion that the man who chills Mamakos will have to weigh at least 200 pounds and hit like Dempsey.

Oddly enough it will not be a test of Mamakos' durability tonight but of his boxing skill. The kid's concrete jaw and cast-iron tummy preclude any possibility of his being hurt, but he still can lose by an embarrassing margin if he hasn't improved enough to cope with Abrams' ring generalship. If the Greek successfully sets the pace, as he intends to do, if he keeps on top of Abrams and makes him fight the way he "Mamakos) likes 'em to, he can win.

Has Abrams Gone Back?

There are some who figure Steve has more steam behind his punches than when he first met George, and that he will hurt the Jewish boy if he blasts him often enough in the mid-section. They point to his three knockdowns over Nedomatsky as evidence of Mamakos' improved punch and reason that if he fights the same kind of battle tonight he'll duplicate the feat.

But Abrams doesn't figure to have gone back so far in six months—especially fighting at least once a month and oftener, to be an easy mark for the tireless tinsmith's helper. He is in superb condition, boxing well and hitting better than ever before, and if he wages the same battle that carried him to victories over Teddy Yarosz and Phil Purr he should win going away.

These are matters, however, that must be settled tonight in the arena under the Marquis of Queensbury code, and it is because no one can safely hazard a guess about the outcome that the fans will flock to see it. The bout is a throwback to the Ahearn-Foreman, Gallagher-[illegible]mar, and Young Van-Irving [illegible] all strictly native brawls that c[illegible]ted the public's imagination a[illegible] fulfilled every expectation. Tonight they should see another great bout, regardless of who wins or loses.

A slightly revamped supporting card includes Bill Bullock vs. Pancho Huerto in a six-round semi-final; Joe Salie vs. Joe Green, six rounds; Jerry Hall vs. Vince Carino, four rounds; and Joe Scroggins vs. Brooks Bowen, four rounds.

Harry Kelley Gives Bosox Only 5 Hits

By Shirley Povich.

Reveling in the heat of yesterday's sun-baked afternoon—the proper prescription for a 32-year-old pitching arm—blubbery Harry Kelley did a magnificent five-hit job on the Boston Red Sox.

Before 16,000 customers, Kelley laid to with both his arm and his bat to beat the Red Sox, 7 to 1, bring the Nats their third straight victory and inflict its fifth straight defeat on the Boston club. Boiled down, it was Kelley 3, Boston 1. Because with his little bat, the perspiring Kelley drove in three of the Nats' runs.

It was a large afternoon for Kelley who outpitched a 38-year-old rookie named Bill Harris, late of Buffalo. He personally knocked Harris loose from two runs when he singled with the bases full in the second inning and throughout the afternoon he was doing such things as fanning Jimmy Foxx twice in succession.

Springs New Pitch.

What Kelley did was to knock a one-game chunk off the Red Sox's margin over the Nats and lift the Washington club to within four games of third place. In only one inning—the sixth, when the Sox scored their only run—was Kelley in trouble.

With the sap running freely in his pitching arm, Kelley put on something of a show. His control was superb, for not a single batter did he walk. What he served the Red Sox was a bewildering assortment of fast balls that plunked into Rick Ferrell's mit with loud reports, sharp-breaking curves that caught the corners of the plate and a new-fangled dipsy-doodle pitch that dipped and rose and then dipped again to the utter confusion of the Boston visitors.

Singles in Two Runs.

Zeke Bonura instituted proceedings against Harris in the second inning when he cuffed a single through the box, but there were no immediate signs that it would amount to anything because Travis forced Bonura and West in turn forced Harris. However, Myer coaxed a walk and so did Rick Ferrell, and the Nats had the bases full.

In this crisis, what did Kelley do, as we were saying, but sock a solid line drive into right center for a single and trot Mr. West and Mr. Myer home.

Cecil Travis was the moving force in the Nats' third run. He led off the fourth inning with a chip-shot two-bagger into right field. He raced to third on West's sacrifice bunt and Buddy Myer fetched him home with a well-spanked fly to Cramer in center field.

Owning only two hits, the Red Sox finally stirred up a run in the sixth inning when they got to Kelley for three hits, Harris singled to center with one out and Cramer

1-Hit Game For Newsom

Hangs a 7-1 Defeat on Tigers in Opener.

St. Louis, Aug. 14 (AP).—Big Buck Newsom's one-hit pitching gave the St. Louis Browns a 7-to-1 victory over the Detroit Tigers in the first game of today's double-header, but a Detroit rally, tying the count of 3 to 3 as the aftermath was called on account of darkness, kept the cellar occupants from seeping the three-game series.

Newsom, in rare form, struck out 12 men in the opener as he limited his hits to a single by George Tebbetts, Detroit catcher, an error when Mel Almada and Beau Bell collided while chasing Jojo White's fly accounted for the Tigers' lone run.

George McQuinn ran his streak

Laffoon Wins Cleveland Open; Snead Second, Burke Is Third

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Aug. 14.—Ky Laffoon, Chicago, turned up with what was needed under pressure today and snatched the $3,000 first prize money from Sam Snead, who romped around the course four under par to take an early lead.

Coming in, needing a one under par 70 to nose out Sam, Laffoon picked up birdies on the fourteenth and fifteenth holes. With the pressure off on the eighteenth, he relaxed and missed a short putt to take a 5 and his 70.

Snead had left the eighteenth only a few minutes before. His 67, compiled despite some almost incredible miscues, tied the course record and permitted him to slip ahead of Bill Burke, of Cleveland, by one stroke to claim second-place money of $1,500 with 281.

Burke had bad luck with his putts all day and finished with 72 for 282. Laffoon's final round was the third subpar effort he has turned in during the contest. He had a 71 yesterday and his cards for the first two days were 70 and 69.

Gets Off Badly.

Laffoon started badly, taking a 5 on the par-4 second hole when his tee shot went in a trap. His second shot bounded down the fairway for about 80 yards and stopped. He took a one-over-par 5 for the hole and went quietly about his work—shooting his birdies.

On the third, he aimed an iron shot straight at a creek to the right of the green and let a hook and the breeze bring it back to within 10 feet of the pin. He missed his putt for a birdie.

On the fourth, his tee shot went into the rough, but he came out with a par 5. He slipped over par on the fifth, but took the stroke back with a birdie on the seventh. He took the eighth and ninth in par and then followed the astonishing Snead in for his 210—four under par for the 72 holes of golf.

Burke took $800 for his four days' operations. Five strokes behind Laffoon were Ray Mangrum, of Oak Mont, Pa.; E. J. Harrison, of Chicago; Vic Ghezzi, of Deal, N. J., and Ralph Guldahl, the National Open champion, from Madison, N. J. They collected $487.50.

Guldahl turned in a 70 today. Ghezzi had 73, Mangrum 70 and Harrison 72.

Snead and Burke scrambled in and out of the largest gallery of the day—a gallery which seemed to be constantly amazed by the way Snead turned out his 67. The West Virginia swinger spent very little time on the fairway during the afternoon, but was shooting out from behind trees and through branches with deadly aim.

On the sixth, coming out of the rough, he hit the pin with a niblick shot and dropped his putt for a birdie three. On the 553-yard fourteenth he was on in two and just missed his putt for an eagle. Snead had more fun on the eighteenth, where two days ago he amused the crowd by putting a shot through the locker room door.

His tee shot hit a trap to the right of the fairway. Snead curved one around an aged oak tree which gives the course its name and it stopped just short of the green. He got his par.

Willie Goggin, of San Bruno, Calif., dropped another 30-footer on the eighteenth, which helped him to a 77 and a total of 291—worth $100.

Jim Foulis, of Hinsdale, Ill., who also had one round equaling the course record of 67, slipped to 73 today for 286 and $350. One stroke behind him were Terl Johnson, of

Nats-Yankees Stage Twin Bill Tomorrow

They will pitch against the Yankees in a double-header, necessitated by the tie game played by the two clubs at Griffith Stadium on July 4.

Chase scored a victory over the Yankees in New York last week, but Krakauskas was beaten by the Yanks through a combination of his own wildness and Buddy Lewis' errors.

Lefty Gomez will pitch one game of the twin bill for the Yanks and it is expected that Wes Ferrell, released by the Nats last week-end, will oppose his former pals in the second game.

Bobby Riggs and Alice Marble Win Grass Court Net Titles

By the Associated Press.

Rye, N. Y., Aug. 14.—Bobby Riggs, of Chicago, today took another step toward the Davis Cup singles berth that is his almost for the asking and Alice Marble, of Beverley Hills, Calif., established herself as the player to beat in the women's national championship as they won the singles titles in the Eastern grass courts tennis championships.

Riggs defeated an old rival, Joe Hunt, of Los Angeles, 6—4, 6—3, 3—6, 10—8, and Miss Marble defeated the No. 3 player in the national rankings, Dorothy May Bundy, of Santa Monica, Calif., 7—5, 6—0.

Neither of the two top-seeded stars was really extended in the finals although Riggs had to work hard to keep from being carried to a fifth set.

Riggs earned his 15th victory in 19 tournaments this summer in the easy way—from the baseline. He attempted to storm the net early in the match, but found that Hunt, conqueror of Frank Parker and Wilmer Allison, had the shots to keep him back. After being passed several times, Bobby was content to spend most of his time in the back court, where he was precise and deadly in his stroking.

Riggs took an early lead when he broke Hunt's service in the second game after going to deuce. Joe squared accounts with a service break in the ninth, but Riggs repeated the gesture in the tenth game to end the set. The second set was easier for the cocky Chicagoan as only two games went to deuce. Hunt's play lagged noticeably and his volleying was less skillful.

Brilliant placements by the Los Angeles boy marked the third set. He was especially effective off the backhand and drove well both down the line and cross court. Riggs didn't force every rally as he did in the first two.

After the intermission, they traded vicious serves with the husky Hunt matching Riggs in this respect, eight of the games were served out at love. The eighteenth game saw Riggs go to match point four times before, on the fourteenth point, Hunt netted a backhand volley.

Miss Marble, after an uncertain start, opened up to win nine straight games and the match with a powerful service and clever volleying that Dorothy couldn't match. She had only one weak session when she dropped back from a 4-2 lead to a 4-5 deficit in the first set. She broke Miss Bundy's service in the first game of the second set and had no more trouble until the final game, when the Santa Monica girl put up desperate resistance to go to deuce several times.

Miss Marble was hitting with all the severity she has shown this week and there was no visible weakness in her game. Off the forehand she was even better than Miss Bundy, who boasts that as her best shot.

Don Budge and Gene Mako, the Davis Cup doubles team, captured the men's doubles title, as expected, but only after a surprisingly hard battle with Hunt and Sidney B. Wood, jr., of New York. The scores were 8—10, 6—1, 5—7, 6—2, 64.

Mako played in-and-out tennis, sometimes rising to the occasion to store with dazzling shots, but frequently hitting badly. Budge, however, had enough to carry him over the rough spots. Wood, a former Davis Cupper, was the outstanding player among the four.

Giants Bag 25 Runs, Win Double Bill

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, Aug. 14.—Bill Terry's second-place Giants today took a doubleheader from the last-place Phils, walloping the underdogs, 11 to 0 and 14 to 6, with 34 hits, ten opponents' errors and 14 bases on balls.

Hal Schumacher and Walter Brown blanked the Phillies in the first game, and Jimmy Ripple and Dick Bartell, with three hits apiece, led a 14-hit attack. Bill Cissell collected four of New York's 20 hits in the nightcap.

As the league-leading Pittsburgh Pirates played and won only one game, and the Giants gained a half game and are only 4½ games behind.

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, Aug. 14.—The Pittsburgh Pirates took a champion's hitch in their belts today and sutout the Chicago Cubs, 2 to 0, behind the sometimes shaky but generally effective slants of big Russ Bauers and Mace Brown.

Their victory cut short a three-game losing streak and kept them 4½ games up of the New York Giants, who edged ahead by sweeping a double-header at Philadelphia.

Given a working margin the second inning by Johnny Rizzo's twelftt home run of the year, a 400-foot line drive over the leftfield fence, Bauers won credit for his eighth game by holding the Cubs to four hits for eight innings and keeping clear of trouble until the ninth, when he yielded another single and hit a batsman with none out.

"Fireman" Brown came in and filled the bases as Augie Galan singled into short right, but Jim Reynolds fouled out and the fast working Pirate infield made its fifth double play of the game in Manager Leo (Gabby) Hartnett's smash to Shortstop Arky Vaughan.

Pep Young, the keystone of Pittsburgh's infield, started three of the liquidations and had a perfect day at bat—thus vindicating his performance in batting into a double play himself yesterday with the bases loaded and the Pirates two runs behind.

Tew Wins Diffenbaugh Trophy Medal at Kenwood With 72

The Punch Line...

By Lewis F. Atchison.

It is a sad commentary on the state of pugilism when Mike Jacobs cloaks himself in the robes of a virtual dictator, gets the more important fighters under lock and key, and sits back comfortably in his over-stuffed swivel chair to watch the small-time promoters sweat trying to make a decent match.

ATCHISON.

At the present time Mr. Jacobs controls the heavyweight, lightweight and featherweight crowns, and probably can inveigle the light-heavyweight and bantamweight champions into signing with him any time he chooses. It's all right for Mike—good, smart business, but it isn't healthy for the fight game.

Champions are bred in small fight clubs where they learn to hit and duck the hard way. They come up the hard way, financially, earning $10, $25 and $75 purses until they finally crash the feature bout class—if they're going that far. And the small clubs produce the customers who pay the freight on the big championship shows, which are the exclusive right and property of Mr. Jacobs nowadays it appears.

It Isn't Right.

But that is so much twiddle-twaddle to Michael, who is looking out for the Jacobs family first, and last, too. The small-time matchmakers must get along as best they can while Jacobs fiddles around with his own shows, plays chess with the fighters under his control, and beefs about the weather. It simply isn't right.

This theme is suggested by the heavyweight situation which is in a sadly depleted condition, locally. Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn would like to get a big fellow to pit against Jack Demsey's 'new protege, Bill Boyd, former All-Navy champion, but can't get anybody in the first ten, because they are committed to Jacobs' service. They can't fight here, because Jacobs has an elimination tournament scheduled next winter, and it wouldn't help the box-office if one of the contestants lost in Washington. Time and again Ahearn has tried to get better type fighters for a District show, but failed because Mike had other plans for the gladiators.

You can't blame Jacobs for protecting his own interests, but you can't defend him against the practice of trying to stifle smaller clubs. It seems to us that he might give them a little better cooperation for the benefit of all concerned.

Joe Turner is seriously considering plans for enlarging his indoor Arena, installing air-conditioning and operating it on a year-around basis. The attendance at wrestling shows held at the Arena when rail balked attempts to put on the show outdoors was surprisingly good, and Turner reasons that an air-cooled plant would attract even larger audiences.

The lone fly in the ointment, however, is Griffith Stadium, which likely would be snapped up by a rival concern for outdoor fighting. Turner doesn't relish competition, times being what they are, and as long as he holds a lease on the ball park and has the lone indoor arena he controls boxing in the District. That's worth hanging on to even if it does cost a little more than it should.

Washington Event To Fowler, Harrell

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

George A. (Buddy) Tew, Kenwood amateur, won the medal in the George Diffenbaugh trophy tournament yesterday over the River Road course with a 72, two strokes over perfect figures. Four flights qualified for match play, with the first round and quarter-finals scheduled next week-end.

Tew, Karl Corby, M. Karaki, Wonald Miller and Johnny Bergelin made the grade in the championship flight, with Bergelin playing the course in 69 yesterday, one day late. He turned in his medal score on Saturday.

First Flight.

WASHINGTON.

Ralph S. Fowler, District Golf Association president, and R. T. Harrell, southpaw ace of the Washington Golf and Country Club, paired to win low gross honors in the two-man, combined score tourney, with a 155 total. Harrell was 76 and Fowler 79.

C. E. Rasmey and G. R. McGuiness won low net with 176-44—132, while F. S. Pomeroy and Elmer Jenkins were second with 157-22—135.

MANOR.

Ray Fleming and Carl Willingham, upset victors over Harry Pitt and Ralph Gibson in the first round of Manor's two-man team championship, were defeated by A. J. Abbott and R. Smith on the final green yesterday.

The defending titleholders, Tom Corwin and Walter Talkes, won, 3 and 1, over H. L. Lacey and W. W. England, while G. D. Messing and H. J. Shea were carried to the twenty-first hole by H. L. Farrell and J. R. Meyer, before winning 1-up in the longest match of the second round.

A. J. Abbott and Ray Smith defeated Ray Fleming and Carl Willingham, 1 up; G. D. Messing and H. J. Shea defeated H. S. Farrell and J. R. Meyer, 1 up, 21 holes; G. E. Hughes and J. T. Maddocks defeated R. MacC. Clarton and C. McLachlan, 1 up; Tom Corwin and Walter Talkes defeated H. L. Lacey and W. W. England, 3 and 1; S. E. Andrews and J. Benifer defeated Dr. J. G. Reilly and Dr. L. T. Souder, 1 up; Dick Meyer and Dick Mackie defeated H. J. Cooper and A. M. Bouie, 4 and 3.

BEAVER DAM.

Mrs. W. L. O'Brien and Forest Thompson won Cliff Spencer's third annual goofy tournament at Beaver Dam with a low gross of 105. Dressed in costume, and permitted using a club of their own selection and a putter, Mrs. O'Brien used a four iron and Thompson a four wood in the Scotch foursome event.

High gross went to Mrs. A. A. Hopiak and W. C. Hackman, with 130, while the most original costume prize went to Sarah Brissenden and J. M. Palmer. Mrs. Albert Haas and Jack Molster were dressed in the funniest outfits.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Two teams tied in the two-ball best ball handicap event at Congressional, George Hill and C. A. Fergus, and Arthur Dowell and F. E. Berquist finishing with net 64s.

INDIAN SPRING.

Jock Olmstead's 269-yard drive up the tenth fairway won the driving contest for the Indian Spring members, while Harry Bachman won the accuracy prize with a 234-yard clout, only three inches off line. Mrs. C. P. Medley won the women's contest with a 171-yard effort.

Richard Kreuzburg left the seventeenth green four under par, needing a four on the last hole for a 67, and the lowest score of his career, but he was in trouble and finished with a six and 69. Mrs. Kreutzburg witnessed the round.

CAPITAL.

Four tied with net 74s for the third prize, Marcey McDonald, 88—14, 74; J. A. Barbeau, 89—15, 74; D. W. Geesa, 86—8, 74, and C. P. Callahan, 89—15, 74.

ROCK CREEK.

Ray Loy was the lone post entry in Harry Graham's Mid-summer Tournament at Rock Creek, the event starting today with an 18-hole qualifying round, to be followed by match play in all flights Tuesday through Friday. It is the initial tourney of the year for the uptown public course.

FORREST GREENS.

Cliff Spencer, Beaver Dam pro, and Mel Shorey, East Potomac mentor, will play in the Middle Atlantic P. G. A. pro-amateur tourney today over the Forrest Greens course near Aberdeen, Md. Several other local pros may compete.

ARGYLE.

In an attempt to save the old green by making the play lighter, Argyle Club members started play on P. W. LeDuc's new fourth green over the week-end, placed some 75 yards to the right of the old green and stretching some 160 yards from a new tee.

The original hole was on eof the sportiest holes in the city, and will be used about half the time.

EAST POTOMAC.

Tommy DDDoerer, jr., has another novel event scheduled on the East Potomac tournament card, a lefthanded tourney, open to private and public links golfers, on August 24.

The courneys for the southpaws will be over the 36-hole route, with only one prize awarded. The entrance fee is $1.

Australian Netters Win 'Cup' Event

By the Associated Press.

Montreal, Aug. 14.—Adrian Quist carried Australia into the interzone finals of the 1938 Davis Cup competition today when he defeated Japan's No. 1 star, Jiro Yamagishi, 6—4, 6—4, 2—6, 9—7, in the deciding match of their American zone final series.

Australia won the round, 3-2, and the right to oppose Germany, the European zone winner, at Brookline, Mass., next Thursday, Friday and Saturday, after Jack Bromwich defaulted to Fumiteru Nakano with the score at 12—12 in the fifth set of their concluding singles match.

Bromwich, beaten by Yamagishi in his other singles match Friday, rallied twice to square the match after little Nakano had won the first and third sets. The scores stood at 6—1, 1—6, 6—4, 3—6, 12—12 when he defaulted.

Australia was expected to win the series after taking the lead Saturday when Quist and Bromwich won the doubles. The finish was a dramatic one, however, as Quist, given no more than an even chance against the sturdy, accurate Japanese, played his finest tennis under pressure. He fell behind at 1—4 in the second set, then made a great rally to win five straight games and earn an almost unbeatable lead.

The Anzac beat the Japanese at his own game, outlasting him in long baseline duels. The usually steady Yamagishi committed 123 errors while Quist made only 76. Yamagishi, however, counted 74 placements to Quist's 40.

After losing the third set, Quist's greater endurance finally carried him through the long fourth. Four of the last five games went to deuce and Quist took three of them. Yamagishi fought off match point five times before he finally fell victim to one of Quist's smashes.

The final set followed service until the eleventh game, when Quist broke through. The Anzac reached match point twice on his service in the twelfth before losing the game. With the count 7-7, Quist pounded Yamagishi's backhand to take the last two games.

Although the second match was little more than an exhibition, it was even closer than the first. Nakano was ahead most of the way but lacked the finishing punch. Bromwich also reached match point in the sixteenth game of the long fifth set, but Nakano took his turn to rally.

After 24 games of the fifth set, and with the end still not in sight, Bromwich defaulted in order to conserve his strength for the interzone series against Germany.

Annapolis Wins Over Celtic Nine

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., Aug. 14.—In a 12-inning game here this afternoon, Annapolis won from St. Mary's Celtic's, of Alexandria, Va., by 3 to 2, taking the rubber of the series of three games. The visitors outbatted the locals, making single hits in each of seven innings to a total of three for the Annapolitans.

Man of the Month

By Arch McDonald.

(WJSV-Wheaties Baseball Commentator.)

(Each day, Arch McDonald distributes 10 points among the Nats whose play was most helpful to the Washington Club. At the end of each month The Washington Post will award to the leading player a gift in token of the honor of being The Post-Wheaties "Man of the Month.")

His one-man show against the Red Sox yesterday netted Harry Kelley the bulk of the latest award of points in the Man of the Month contest and projects him high among the leaders. Here's how the points were distributed:

To Kelley, six points, because he pitched sensationally in holding the Red Sox to five hits and one run, and because in the second inning he singled to drive in enough runs to win the ball game.

To George Case, two points, because he virtually clinched the game in the seventh inning when he doubled to drive in two runs and boost the Nats' lead from 3 to 1 to 5 to 1.

To Cecil Travis, one point, because he doubled and later scored for the Nats in the fourth and scored a second run in the eighth.

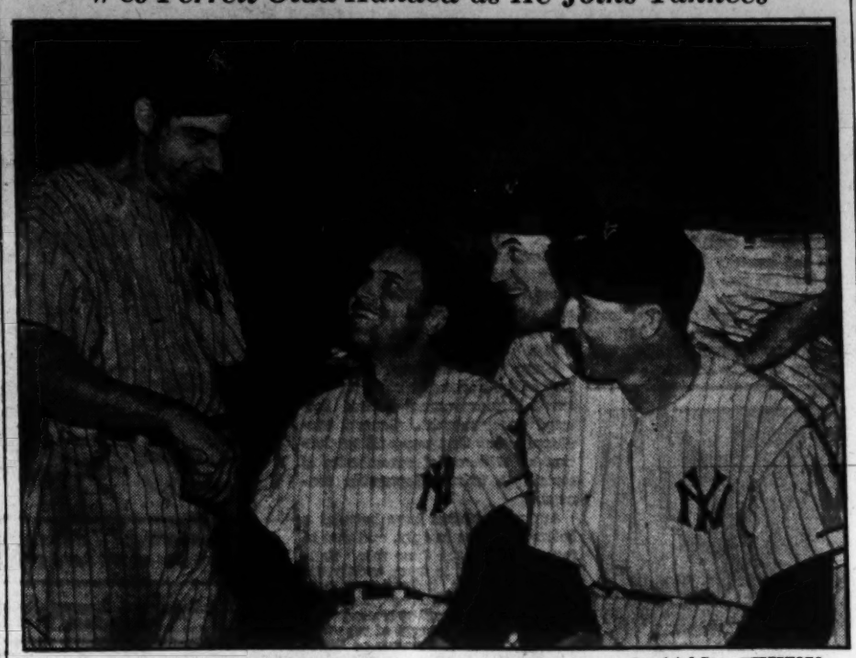
To Buddy Myer, one point, because he scored three of the Nats' runs, because he drove in one run with a long fly and because he beat out a perfect drag bunt.

The Score:

Zeke Bonura	20	Sammy West	7
Buddy Myer	19	Monte Weaver	5
Al Simmons	11	Angelo Giuliani	5
Cecil Travis	10	Taft Wright	4
Harry Kelley	10	Ossie Bluege	2
Dutch Leonard	9	Elon Hogsett	2
George Case	8	Joe Krakauskas	2
Buddy Lewis	8	Rick Ferrell	1
Ken Chase	7

Man of the Month— For May, Johnny Stone; for June, Al Simmons; for July, Buddy Lewis; for August, (?).

Wes Ferrell Glad-Handed as He Joins Yankees



Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Kleins Wins, Takes Lead

Behind the steady hurling of Billy Ligget, Klein's Tavern stepped into first place in the National City League A second half race yesterday by downing the strong Fairfax Farms Dairy nine, 3-1, to register its third victory in as many starts.

With Luckett, Moxley and Merillo leading the attack, Kleins got away to an early lead. The catching of Bob Mathias was outstanding for the winners, as the clever little receiver was nipping the enemy runners off the bag. Durkin collected three hit sto star at bat for the Dairy team.

Charlie Booker twirled one-hit ball to give the Rose Liquor nine a 12-1, five-inning victory over the Police Boys' Club. Sheridan, Rose catcher, got three hits i nthree tries to lead the winner's offensive, while Kimmel, Police second baseman, rifled a single to marr Booker's attempt at a perfect mound job.

But there was a young man who pitched a no-hit, no-run tilt yesterday. His name was Sam Mallos. In a League B engagement, Sam struck out six and walked five as the Girardians defeated the Pirates, 5-0. It was the second time this season that a Girardian s hurler turned in a no-hit, no-run game.

The District Plumbers captured the second half League B crown by stopping the Anacostia Motor's nine, 7-5. Willie Shaeffer exhibited great form on the mound, allowing but four hits. The game-winning blow came in the eighth when Billy Robertson stepped to the plate and homered with one mate aboard. Sherrod Robertson, a brother of Billy, also aided in the tally-getting by collecting three hits in four attempts.

Tucci Plumbers took a 10-6 victory from the Retail Clerks in another B League tussle. Crown and McReady got three hits apiece to feature the batting attack of the winners. Poling and Bowman were the loser's star sluggers.

Coffey Screen went into a tie for the National City junior title by defeating Bethesda, 10-5. Dicky Rozelle, of Central, hurled splendid ball, while Jerry Connally doubled in the first inning with the bases loaded to give the Coffey squad an early lead.

In another junior engagement, Nick Bombard nosed out the No. 11 Police Boy's Club, 11-10. Echard and Jones were the best with the willow for the Bombard aggregation. Crawford and Raba starred for the losers. Pick up 16 box scores.

Bill Talburt Wins A. A. U. Swim Title

By the slender margin of less than two points, Bill Talburt, of the Shoreham Swimming Club, yesterday added the A. A. U. outdoor high-board diving championship to his District A. A. U. indoor high-board title in competition at the Washington Golf and Country Club.

Talburt's score was 11.16 against 114.63 for John Marshall, former District high-board champion, who finished second. Marshall, unattached, is a former Florida State champion. Third was John Walker, also unattached, with 82.77.

Exhibition diving was given by June Booth Stan and Patsy Palmer, while Patsy and Phyllis, sisters, gave an exhibition of tandem swimming.

Richmond, Va., Aug. 14 (AP).—Country Club of Virginia Golfers kept their unbeaten record for the season in tact today when they turned back Congressional Country Club, of Washington, D. C., 11½ to 6½, in a Nassau match at the James River course.

Claude Rippy, playing with Parker Nolan as the Congressional Club's No. 1 twosome, had the low medal score of the day when he shot an even par 37-35—72. He and Nolan swept all three points in their match with Charlie Kent and Douglas Call, of the local team.

P. J. Kinger and Bob Holland (Congressional), 2½ points; Sherlock Bronson and P. C. Holladay (C. C. Va.), ½.

Dr. R. A. Keilly and J. O. Rhyne (Congressional), 0 points; R. H. Spessard and Zach Toma (C. C. Va.), 3.

Lisanti, Augustine to Box at Cumberland

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 14.—Tony Lisanti, featherweight of the Shamrock Athletic Club, will meet Roland Augustine, of Connellsville, Pa., in the feature match of the Shamrock A. C. amateur boxing show to be held here Friday night.

Boxers of the Shamrock A. C. will oppose Connellsville scrappers in at least six of the matches on the card. Billy Lynch, 122-pounder of the Central Y. M. C. A., has been signed to meet Ray Ruffo, 124, of Connellsville.

Riverdale Tops Laconia.

Riverdale defeated the Laconia Athletic Club, 10-9, yesterday on the former's home field. The home team tied up the ball game 9-all by shoving across seven runs in the ninth, and then scored the winning tally in the tenth.

Four Home Runs Help Yanks Beat Macks Twice, 4-3, 9-2

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 14.—The Yankees completed a three-day home run spree against the Philadelphia Athletics today by sweeping both ends of a double-header, 4 to 3 and 9 to 2, before 33,922 fans in Yankee Stadium.

George Selkirk's homer in the ninth inning—his fifth of the five-game series and his ninth of the year—broke a tie and gave the Yanks the opener. Spud Chandler posted his eleventh win of the year against three defeats in this game, and Bill Dickey and Lou Gehrig helped the cause along with a homer apiece.

Gehrig also hit one in the nightcap, boosting his total to 21 for the year and bringing the Yankee total to an even dozen for the series. The "Iron Hoss" also collected a double and a single in the afterpiece, in which Monte Pearson chalked up win No. 10, with a nine-hit performance.

The double victory boosted the Yanks' American League lead to 7½ games over the Cleveland Indians.

Edgar Smith was charged with the opening game defeat, giving up the home-run ball to Selkirk to complete a Yankee comeback after the A's took a commanding 3-1 lead in the seventh.

sent him to second with a single to right. Kelley eased the tension by forcing Vosmik to pop up, but Jimmy Foxx awoke suddenly from his batting slump, slashed a single through Lewis for his first hit in 12 times at bat, and scored Harris. Kelley quelled the uprising by disposing of Cronin on a fly to Case.

As if their 3-1 lead was not entirely satisfactory, the Nats went out and collected another pair of runs in the seventh. Buddy Myer took advantage of Jimmy Foxx's lame foot to beat out a drag bunt to the first baseman and then on Rick Ferrell's attempted sacrifice, Foxx lost his footing and muffed the ball for an error. Kelley sacrificed the pair along and George Case ran 'em home with a scorching double that scooted past third base like a scared bolt of lightning.

They found young Dickman pitching for the Sox in the eighth and jolted him out of a pair of runs after he had hit Travis on the leg and issued an intentional pass to Myer. Rick Ferrell answered this affront by pounding a single through the box to score Travis and the irrepressible Kelley chimed in with a similar sock to score Myer.

In case you are wondering what the Red Sox did after scoring that run of theirs in the sixth inning, why they didn't do anything at all. Not a man jack of 'em got on base against Kelley in the seventh, eighth and ninth.

Stocks Suffer Sharpest Drop In Five Months

Decline, Led by Manufacturing Shares, Persists for Six Days.

By Edward H. Collins.

A Special Correspondent.

New York, Aug. 14.—The same adverse influences which conjoined a fortnight ago to bring the security markets almost to a standstill—persistent weakness in commodities and threats of war in Europe—were again operative last week, but with more positive results. Last week they brought not inaction, but heavy selling, in the stock market, and in consequence the latter suffered its severest break in nearly five months.

Led by the manufacturing stocks, the averages of the New York Herald Tribune declined in every session of the week. The selling gaining momentum as the movement progressed. The widest losses were established on the last two full days of trading, Thursday and Friday, when the list fell 1.2 and 0.94 points, respectively, to the accompaniment of increasing volume.

Turnover Increases.

Turnover, which, except for one session, had remained well below a million shares a day for ten days prior thereto, increased to nearly 1,100,000 on Thursday and nearly 1,500,000 on Friday. At Saturday's close the averages had fallen to 102.81, against 105.99 a week earlier, a net loss of 3.18 points. The decline, the widest since the week ended March 26, erased, in effect, all the gains that had been made since July 1, when the sensational perpendicular rise of late June gave way to an erratic and hesitant, though still generally upward, movement.

In the cotton goods situation we have fresh evidence that farm planning is now out of date almost before the ink is dry on new legislation. The law contemplated that crop surplus should be relieved temporarily by loans and more permanently by a reduction of acreage. Although a 9-cent loan was made on last year's crop, and although acreage was reduced drastically this year, supplies of the commodity are still so heavy that prices are today in an area which makes a new loan almost inevitable. October cotton closed in the New York market on Saturday at 8.13 cents. The law provides that when the average price reaches 52 per cent of "parity" a loan must be set up for the new crop and since "parity" is figured at approximately 16 cents, it will be seen that prices are now flirting very definitely with the level at which such a loan becomes mandatory.

War Clouds.

Where two weeks ago the clash between the Russians and the Japanese at Changkufeng gave pause to the stock market, last week, fresh war clouds appeared along the Franco-German border and over Czechoslovakia, serving to keep alive the nervous apprehension of the financial community.

Up to last week this nervousness had been confined to the foreign exchange market, where the pound sterling was particularly under pressure. The weakness in sterling continued last week in a considerable measure, and for the first time it transmitted itself to the share market. Business news was again modestly encouraging; but that had been not only expected but largely anticipated. Such was not the case with the newest threat to the peace of Europe. Wall Street has not forgotten that August was the fateful month in which the world embarked on the great war in 1914.

Although its immediate effects on the financial markets may be debatable, there can be no doubt that the President's "invasion" of Georgia and his attack on Senator George's candidacy last week disturbed sentiment. Such activities are, and must be, a constant reminder to business that talk from Washington of a "breathing spell" is still utterly meaningless.

Business cannot but feel instinctively, even though it may not have reasoned the matter out for itself, that there can be no breathing spell—that there can be no real freedom of enterprise—so long as the free institutions of democracy (one of which, surely, is the freedom of a sovereign State to choose without dictation its representative in the United States Senate) are being either directly assailed or, as in the Georgia episode, indirectly undermined.

It may be that Mr. Roosevelt believes, as he professes to believe, that these efforts constantly to attach to himself greater powers over every phase of American life—such efforts including his seizure of the banking system, his seizure of control of Congress by obtaining from it control over prodigious sums of money, his attempt to seize the Supreme Court—are perfectly compatible with a state of business assurance and a flourishing spirit of enterprise.

Whether he does or not, the amazing thing is that there are many defenders of these practices who believe this and no amount of cumulative evidence to the contrary seems to disturb their equanimity. It is a constant source of mystery to them that business should be hesitant in the face of these repeated and indubitable manifestations of a dictatorial spirit.

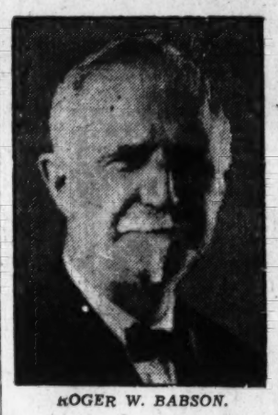
Holding Act May Prove Boon To Utilities, Babson Holds

In the Long Run, He Says, So-Called 'Death Sentence' May Be a Help to the Power Industry.

By Roger W. Babson.

Gloucester, Mass., Aug. 14.—The utility business has never regained its pre-depression popularity. Most everyone thinks that the reason for this is the "death sentence" imposed on the industry by the holding company act of 1935. However, I believe that the real cause is the constant increase in utility taxation and public competition. Actually, under the wise administration of the SEC I feel that the "death sentence" may, in the long run, prove to be beneficial to the power business. But the Government's fostering of publicly financed, tax-free competition will never help taxpayer, electricity customer nor security holder.

Much has been written about the harshness of the utility holding company act. While I doubt if there is any real need for the act at this time, I feel that investors may be surprised by the little effect it will have on most companies. Its provisions call for the breaking up of holding concerns whose operating territories are not adjacent to each other. Hence, there will be a lot of swapping of properties. When this rearranging period is over, there should be worthwhile economies in operation. Only in the case of overcapitalized holding companies should this death sentence prove a hardship.



ROGER W. BABSON.

Nazilike Persecution.

Through the years I have applauded the New Deal in many of its policies. I think that the President is sincere in wanting to give the wage earner a bigger share of the Nation's income. But, believing him sincere, I cannot understand his relentless persecution of the utility industry. His and his advisers' treatment of the power industry almost parallels the Nazi torturing of the Jews. The latest step in their utility-baiting program is the renewal of PWA loans and outright gifts to municipalities for the construction of public power plants to compete with existing privately owned systems.

For the security holders of companies affected by such competition the New Deal has turned out to be one of the rawest deals in history! The voter is fooled by the anti-utility campaign because he thinks the industry is owned by the "Rockefellers and the Morgans." Only 3 per cent, or less than 4,000,000 people in the United States pay income taxes. There are, however, 6,000,000 owners of power company securities. If all the 4,000,000 who do pay income taxes own power securities; there are still 2,000,000 others whose earnings are not large enough to pay an income tax, who also hold utility securities. The same situation undoubtedly applies in Canada.

Publicly Owned Industry.

Moreover, the majority of the bonds of the utility industry are owned (1) by insurance companies who have 65,000,000 policyholders; (2) by savings banks who have 48,000,000 depositors; (3) by hospitals who give succor to millions of Americans; (4) by libraries who provide free reading material to 130,000,000 citizens; (5) by churches who pay the salaries of thousands of clergymen, and (6) by colleges who give education to 1,000,000 United States youths each year.

Hence, the power industry is not owned by a few wealthy people. There scarcely is a United States resident who does not have a direct stake in the securities of this business either through his insurance policy, his savings deposit, his hospital, or his church. Yet, it is this industry which the President has singled out to badger, to intimidate, to persecute and to belittle for the last six years.

New PWA Loans.

In June Congress appropriated $4,000,000,000 for priming our prosperity pump. The PWA can loan part of this money to municipalities to build public power plants. Furthermore, in addition to the loans, the PWA can make outright gifts up to 35 per cent of the total cost of these new duplicating systems. The only provision to hamstring the PWA's generosity is that the money shall not be granted to any community where the existing company's rates are "fair and reasonable." But this is no safeguard because the final judge of whether or not the rates are "fair and reasonable" is to be the Public Works Administration.

Electricity rates have been regulated by State utility commissions for years. Under this supervision, rates have been constantly reduced. They now are only 50 per cent of the level of 25 years ago. Since 1933 utility taxes have nearly doubled and prices of their materials and their labor rates have risen sharply. Yet, their rates are 23 per cent under the 1933 depression level! What other industry can make such a claim? Utility customers in the United States and Canada today are receiving far better service at a far lower rate than they are anywhere else in the world!

The money which the Government is borrowing to give or to loan to municipalities is your money and my money and 130,000,000 other American's money. Is it right to use these funds, as gifts, for the building of municipal plants which will destroy the existing private systems, financed by our hospitals, schools, churches, banks, insurance companies and individual citizens?

These new public systems will help neither taxpayer nor customer. Their rates will be lower than private rates just as your living expenses would be lower if the Government gave you your house and did not ask you to pay taxes. The municipality, however, will lose a tremendous chunk of tax revenues because private utilities are great taxpayers. The loss will be made up by higher taxes on homes and other real estate. In addition, some year soon Federal taxes will be boosted again so that the Federal Government can pay back the money it borrowed to build these unnecessary power systems.

Congressmen's Votes.

Furthermore, these new public plants will not help to prime the prosperity pump. They will only frighten those who, in normal times, invest nearly $1,000,000,000 annually in the building of needed new private power plants. The Government cannot prime the prosperity pump forever, especially if the priming never takes—and it will not "take" unless private capital begins to flow through the pump! A proposed amendment to the $4,000,000,000 spending bill would have prohibited the use of PWA money as gifts for building competing power systems. The Congressmen and Senators who voted against this amendment should be shown their mistake.

Steel Industry Expects Gains In September

August Bookings Exceed July's, Which Were Better Than June's.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Aug. 14.—Conditions in the steel industry continue to show slow improvement, the sharp rise of recent weeks having been checked, the magazine Steel said today.

Many observers have set Labor Day as the starting point of the substantial improvement looked forward to for months. General conditions point that way and production of 1939 model automobiles is certain to bolster September tonnage.

August bookings have been at a better rate than in July, and that in turn exceeded the June rate. Sellers find buying is from widely diversified sources, indicating a general increase in needs of consumers.

National rate of operation last week held at 40 per cent of capacity, in spite of loss of 3 points at Pittsburgh and 4.5 points at Chicago. Consistently increased rates at nearly all other centers served to balance these declines.

Detroit gained 14 points to 52 per cent, Cleveland 3 to 41, Youngstown 3 to 43, Cincinnati 7 to 65, New England 5 to 40, Buffalo 2.5 to 42 and eastern Pennsylvania 1 to 30. Wheeling was unchanged at 54 per cent, Birmingham at 50 and St. Louis at 30. The 3-point loss at Pittsburgh brought the rate to 30 per cent and the 4.5 decline at Chicago resulted in 33.5 per cent.

Recent sharp advances in scrap have carried prices to a level where readjustment seems necessary and easing is apparent in some centers, according to the magazine. Higher prices have brought out increasingly large supplies at some points, dampening the situation somewhat.

July Building Peak For Nine Months

Chicago, Aug. 14.—Money spent for actual building operations in the Nation as a whole during July was 5.1 per cent greater than in June and 12.7 per cent less than during July last year, according to the August issue of Building, the national news review, published today.

Bedtime Stories

Instinct at Work.

—Old Mother Nature.

Tommy, Sue and Sammy were calling on the Old Naturalist, who was living in Farmer Brown's sugar house, over in the Green Forest. He had just shown them a wonderful example of a spider's web between two trees, the work of a member of the group known as orb-weavers. They get this name from the shape of the web. So perfect was the design and so beautifully woven that it was difficult to believe that the little weaver had done this through instinct alone, as the Old Naturalist insisted.

"Just what is instinct, anyway? Tommy says that it is inherited knowledge of what to do under conditions that have been met with often in the past and experience has taught how to meet. He talks like a dictionary. What I want to know is, what makes it work, if you know what I mean," said Sue.

All the little laugh lines wrinkled around the eyes of the Old Naturalist. "I know what you mean," said he. "If you should slip, you would grab for the nearest thing within reach, to keep you from falling, and you would do it without thought, wouldn't you?"

"Your action would be instinctive, prompted by instinct, done without conscious thought, and the action of slipping would be the push button, so to speak, to cause the instinctive action to save yourself," explained the Old Naturalist.

"Hunger prompts all creatures to look for food," he continued. "Man is the only one who plans specified times for eating. Other creatures do not think about eating until hunger sets them to instinctively hunt for food. The desire for food prompted the builder of this web to make it, for, of course, it is a trap, a snare to catch food. Instinct, not reason, led to the spinning of the long guy lines, the framework. When the framework was finished the impulse to continue with those long straight lines of silk ceased and the completion of the frame gave the impulse that started the next operation, the bridging of the spaces between all those radiating lines with a series of threads carefully spaced, thus making the orb. Having started this, she had to keep on until it was finished. If I had cut some of those lines forming the framework, she couldn't have left off the bridge-work she was doing and repaired the breaks, because instinct works strictly according to impulse, and the impulse then was for bridge-work. Instinct is a sort of a fixed force that isn't to be diverted by the unusual, as reason would be. If the spider was working through intelligence, she would stop and repair damage as soon as she discovered it, then return to what she had been doing. The impulse released by instinct just has to keep going until it is used up. That is the way it looks to me, anyway."

"That's kind of deep, but I guess we get the idea," said Sammy. "You mean that instinct starts something and sees it through to a finish, no matter how foolish it may be."

"That is right. In very many cases it is, anyway," replied the Old Naturalist. "The spider who spun that web never had a spinning or weaving lesson in her life. When the time came for a web, instinct told her what to do step by step, and she did it, like these automatic machines that make various articles. She was just a sort of living machine while she was making that web. Intelligence, no matter how great it is, is likely to make mistakes. Instinct, if there is no outside interference, makes no mistakes. Instinct does marvelous things, but sometimes it does what seems like woefully stupid things."

"What, for instance?" Sue asked.

Just then Lightfoot the Deer stepped out into the little clearing in front of the sugar house, and spiders and webs and instinct were forgotten for the time being, as following the example of the Old Naturalist, Tommy, Sue and Sammy became motionless, that the beautiful animal might not become unduly alarmed.

Local Insurance Men Win Trip to Alaska

Minneapolis, Aug. 14.—New business produced in Washington over the past 15 months by R. M. Plake and C. C. Potter, representatives of Northwestern National Life Insurance Co., entitles them to leave Friday for a trip to Alaska as company convention guests, O. J. Arnold, president, announced today. Mr. Plake, who is the company's general agent in Washington, also qualified Mrs. Plake for the trip.

Qualification for the convention trip was based not only on new life insurance sold but also on other factors, such as conservation of old business and measuring an agent's effectiveness in serving his clients' life insurance needs.

Says—

Almost everybody's heard about actors havin' "yes men" out here in Hollywood and I ain't denyin' they do have 'em but actors have'ta pay for 'em and they can only have as many as they can afford. When it comes to havin' "yes men" the director is the king of all of 'em. Everybody tries to do somethin' for the director to attract his attention to 'em so he'll remember 'em on the next job.

We were on location the other night and I was sittin' in a car over out of the way when suddenly a big blaze lit up the sky. I sat up, thinkin' the whole set was going up in flames, when a fella next to me says, "Don't worry—it ain't nothing. The director jest asked for a match."

District Moves For Permanent Safety Program

Cox's Committee to Discuss Today Ways to Keep Children Off Streets.

Despite heavy Sunday traffic, Washington yesterday marked its eleventh consecutive day free of highway accidents fatal to children, on the eve of the District's establishment of a permanent vigilance campaign to halt the killing of children.

Headed by Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox, of the District National Guard, the newly-created Traffic Safety Committee, including 12 civic leaders, will meet today to lay foundations for a permanent program to make the streets safe for children, and to keep children from playing in traffic.

"Not only will the committee take up the child safety problem in all its phases, but it also will study thoroughly means of preventing or decreasing all motor accidents," Gen. Cox declared last night.

Discussion Set Today.

"At the first meeting today we will merely discuss the various safety proposals, but we shall not call a recess until we have definitely made headway. As a permanent body we intend to keep constant watch over the program. We will hold hearings so all citizens and agencies may express their opinions and offer their measures in this necessary program."

The committee will convene today at 3:30 p. m. in the National Guard Armory, Sixth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest.

Dr. Thomas W. Gosling, acting superintendent of schools and member of the committee, yesterday said that he would propose in addition to the adoption of emergency measures, formulation of an educational drive through neighborhood councils and civic groups to instill parents with the doctrine of safety.

A. A. A. to Back 4 Measures.

Intensive action by the neighborhood organizations would be a "tremendously powerful" factor in relieving the city of the child traffic menace, he declared.

Four measures will be presented by Washington I. Cleveland, of American Automobile Association, another advisory group member. He said:

"First, we must make the playgrounds so attractive as to lure the children off the streets.

"Then, we must undertake a vast publicity campaign, via press, radio, and newsreel, to impress upon parents and motorists their responsibility in halting the accidents.

"Third, we must try to induce apartment house owners to change their policy of chasing the children off the lawn onto the street, to cooperation in setting up play-spots for youngsters.

"The A. A. A. will offer as a fourth proposal the immediate creation of play yards covering the entire city. To stimulate this movement among the citizens, we should sponsor a contest in each of several District areas for the most attractive play yard set up at a cost of $5 or less, for the most attractive play yard fixed up by children under 16, and for the most attractive yard."

Apathetic Parents Hinder.

George Keneipp, of Keystone Automobile Club, in addition to a long-range program he outlined at the traffic parley called last week by Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, will introduce a new problem for discussion.

"Some way must be found to deliver a potent message to parents too indifferent or apathetic to join in community co-operative efforts," he said.

1. Do not play in the street.
3. Do not hop rides.
4. Skate on the sidewalks and not in the middle of the street.
6. Look to the right and left before crossing streets.
7. Always obey the patrol boys.

The Rev. Walter G. Borchers, jr., assistant pastor of First Congregational Church, yesterday told his congregation:

"A disregard for the rights of other people is one of the major causes of accidents. We should put ourselves in the 'other fellow's shoes,' so to speak.

Athlete Climbs.

Parsons, W. Va., Aug. 14.—Friends here were advised today that Carl Flanagan, former Parsons High School athlete, who was a member of the State championship basketball team a few years ago, had recently climbed the Chief's Head, third highest peak in the Rocky Mountain National Park in Colorado where he is stationed as a ranger. The peak towers 13,579 feet above sea level. He is the first person to reach the top of this peak this year.

Stadium Improved.

Lafayette, Ind., Aug. 14.—Looking forward to the coming football season, numerous improvements in and about the Ross-Ade Stadium, which are designed to increase the comfort and enjoyment of the spectators, are now in the process of completion, it was announced today by Bob Woodworth, Purdue acting athletic director.

Mullen Accepts Post.

Plane Loses Wheel, Lands Safely

This three-place biplane was landed safely at Congressional Airport yesterday by its pilot, Miss Coba Overman, after it lost a wheel in the air. An airport attendant points to the offending wheel, back in place.

Sign Language in Air Saves 3 Women in Wheelless Plane

2 Rescuers Swing Wheel That Pretty Internal Revenue Employe Lost Until She 'Catches On;' Drops Down Calmly on Damaged Gear.

Sign language in the sky and an amateur pilot's skill yesterday afternoon saved the lives of three women trapped for 20 minutes above Congressional Airport, near Rockville, Md., in a three-seater biplane minus one wheel.

Taking off on a short pleasure hop with two friends, Miss Coba Overman, Bureau of Internal Revenue employe, and a licensed pilot for the past two years, lost the left wheel from her plane a few seconds after it rose from the ground.

She and her companions, Mrs. Orval DuBois, 4508 Conduit road northwest, and Miss Evelyn DuBois, of Agra, Kans., cruised cross-country for awhile in ignorance of their predicament, while Walter Stonell and Burt Purnell took off in a second plane to warn them.

When Miss Overman failed to understand their frantic gestures, Stonell and Purnell hastily landed and returned aloft swinging the missing wheel.

"I got the idea then," Miss Overman said last night, "but I really wasn't as excited as the people on the ground."

Pilots in the anxious crowd of 300 persons which had gathered at the airport said Miss Overman landed with professional skill, slowing the plane's speed to 30 miles per hour before easing the right wheel against the earth. "It was just like watching a baby laid on his crib," one spectator reported.

The Rockville Rescue Squad stood by as the ship came down.

Soap-box Derby At Akron Won By Omaha Boy

By the Associated Press.

Akron, Ohio, Aug. 14.—Robert Berger, of Omaha, Nebr., won the All-American Soapbox Derby championship today in the speedy time of 28:75.

Richard Ballard, of White Plains, N. Y., trailed by only a split second. Stanford Hartshorn, jr., of Gardner, Mass., came in third.

In a sequel to the All-American final, two international races were held. The international title also was won by Berger, with Buddy Stroop, of Panama, Canal Zone, second and Bob Wilson, of Belleville, Ontario, third.

Only One Collision.

Only one mishap occurred in the afternoon. In a second-round race, Allen Cloyd, jr., of Lexington, Ky., lost control of his car and collided with that of Robert Holmes, of Los Angeles. Neither was able to finish the heat, but Robert was permitted to try again in a later heat after his racer had been repaired. Neither of the youngsters was injured.

Donald Sanders, 14, of Yakima, Wash., was shaken up in a trial run yesterday afternoon and was taken to a hospital for observation, but he was on hand to participate in today's racing.

Boys from the District, Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia who placed in the heats were: Norman Rocco, Washington, third in the twenty-ninth heat; Lynford Keyser, Morgantown, W. Va., third in the thirtieth heat; Charles Parks, Richmond, third in the twentieth heat; Jackie Phillips, Hagerstown, third in the second heat; Adrian McKinney, Morgantown, W. a., first in the twelfth heat.

Posses Comb River Jungle For Bad Men

By the Associated Press.

Dequeen, Ark., Aug. 14.—A small army of peace officers from three States combed today a 10-square-mile wilderness in southwest Arkansas for Floyd Hamilton, southwestern bad man, and a desperado companion believed to be Ted Walters.

The area embraces the densely wooded mountains along the Arkansas-Oklahoma border and the jungles of Cossatot River. The underbrush is so dense that visibility is limited to a few feet.

Capt. Cliff T. Atkinson, assistant superintendent of the Arkansas state police, and Deputy Sheriff Leslie Dillahunty ambushed the fugitives yesterday, forcing them to abandon a stolen car under a hail of machine gun fire.

Arsenal Abandoned.

Atkinson sent out word from the wilderness today that Old Boston had picked up a trail twice within the river bottoms but had been unable to follow it through. He expressed belief the men were armed only with pistols and a small amount of ammunition. They left two sawed-off shotguns, a rifle and an automatic pistol in the car with 30 rounds of ammunition.

Remnants of the old Clyde Barrow-Raymond Hamilton gang, the two men are wanted in connection with the robbery of the Bank of Bradley, Ark., June 7, several minor holdups, including a $100 robbery of a bottling company at Nashville, Ark., Friday, and numerous car thefts.

They also are suspected of a recent robbery of a Woodriver, Ill., bank.

Kidnaping Spurs Hunt.

St. Paul, Aug. 14 (AP).—Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation today began checking the abduction of a couple in St. Louis and the possibility that one of the kidnapers may have been Floyd Hamilton, notorious outlaw.

Victims of the abduction are Daniel Fahey, jr., 31, an architect for the National Park Service, and Miss Peggy Gross, 23, who were seized by two men in St. Louis about 12:30 a. m. yesterday and released near Champlin, Minn., last night.

"The only motive for the kidnaping seems to be that the men wanted transportation to Minnesota," F. B. I. men said.

Auto Crashes Injure Three From District

Dozen Others Are Hurt in Accidents in Nearby Territory.

More than a dozen persons were injured yesterday in auto accidents in nearby Maryland Maryland and Virginia. Three of the victims were Washingtonians.

Luther Brown, 23, Hazel Brown, 23, and Donald McCliff, 30, all of Bowie, Md., suffered head and leg injuries when their auto crashed with a stolen car on Defense highway, near Buena Vista, Md. Occupants of the second auto, reported stolen, fled.

George Cover, 20, of Groveton, Va., suffered a leg fracture when his motorcycle collided with an automobile on Richmond highway, near Groveton. Lemuel H. A. Mitchell, of 618 S street northeast, driver of the car, and a friend, W. A. Belchor, of the same address, suffered minor injuries.

Two men were hurt near Sunderland,, Md., when a speeding car, pursued by a State trooper, crashed into another car. Injured were Joseph E. Ellis, 27, of 912 Seventh street southwest, and Henry Taylor, of Owings, Md.

Six persons were hurt when their auto struck a culvert on Route 3, near Rock Point, Md. They were taken to Casualty Hospital.

General Upshur To Inspect 5th Marines Today

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Blue Ridge Summit, Pa., Aug. 14. Brig. Gen. William P. Upshur, U. S. M. C., director of the Marine Corps Reserve, accompanied by his aide, Capt. L. A. Brown, will inspect the Fifth Organized Marine Corps Reserve tomorrow.

The general has requested that no honors be rendered for him and that the field training schedule be not interrupted. He will find the entire battalion on the rifle range, which, to him, is the most important of a Marine's training.

Although the battalion is facing one of its most arduous days tomorrow, with reveille set at 4 a. m., and all day record firing beginning at 5, the enlisted men used most of Sunday to expend energy and demonstrate the high morale and contentment of the battalion.

Led by Sergt. Maj. Harry F. Volkman, as battalion commander, a comedy costume sunset parade was burlesqued in honor of 2-year-old Miss Clay Keene Bernard, known familiarly in the battalion as "The Butterwinkle."

The costumes ranged all the way from Mahatma Gandhi wearing boxing gloves to Sitting Bull armed with a flit gun. The parade was featured by front and centering "The Butterwinkle" and presenting her with an official warrant as mascot of the battalion with the rank of major, signed by every noncommissioned officer in the battalion. The little girl, incidentally, was the only one in the whole array attired in correct Marine Corps uniform, decked out with medals some of which were minted 50 years before she was born.

The battalion expects to complete its record firing tomorrow. Then it swings into four days of combat exercises over the mountains in this area. Final parade ceremonies and presentation of awards is scheduled for next Saturday afternoon, the battalion returning to Washington Sunday morning.

Clear, cool weather continues at night, requiring two blankets.

Lewis and Adamick Meet in Philadelphia

Philadelphia, Aug. 14 (AP).—John Henry Lewis, world light heavyweight champion, and Jimmy Adamick, heavyweight from Midland, Mich., have been matched for a 12-round fight at the Philadelphia Municipal Stadium on September 12, it was announced today by Promoter Herman Taylor.

Lewis, who was to have met Tony Galento on July 26 in a fight postponed by Galento's illness, will make his first appearance in the ring since he began training for the match last June.

The Pittsburgh Negro's title will not be at stake in the fight with Adamick, who knocked out Al Ettore, Philadelphia heavyweight, in four rounds last May.

Face Illini First.

Champaign, Ill., Aug. 13.—Led by their triple-threat bantam halfback, Johnny Montgomery, Ohio University of Athens will encounter Illinois in the opening game of the 1938 football season at Memorial Stadium here September 24.
